Mr. Stuart Bell: For the fourth successive year the total return on the Commissioners' investments has exceeded the independent benchmark. Provisional figures for 1997 show the total return on the Commissioners' assets was 19.7% against the WM All Funds benchmark of 16.5%. This reflects sound strategic and tactical investment choices as well as the current high market values of UK equities. The value of the assets at 31 December 1997 was £3,481 million (£2,976 million in 1996). Income was £135 million (£146 million in 1996) which represented an underlying increase after taking into account special dividends and other one-off items of £3.9 million in 1997 compared to £15.1 million in 1996. The Commissioners' total expenditure in 1997 in support of the Church was £130.6 million (136.2 million in 1996).

With the support and cooperation of the rest of the Church and, in particular, because of the generosity of the parishes, the Commissioners have been able to restore a balance between assets and distribution levels. They have also been able to rebalance their investment portfolio towards long term total return with a broader spread of risk. Both these factors have underpinned the strong investment performance of recent years.

A six year programme of reducing distribution levels was completed in 1997 and parishes now bear a greater responsibility for the financial support of their clergy. Parishes now meet 62% of the clergy pay bill (£160 million in 1997) with the Commissioners meeting only 15%. Parishes started to contribute towards clergy pensions from 1 January 1998 following the introduction of the new pensions arrangements made possible by the Pensions Measure which was passed by this House last year.

This continuing acceptance of responsibility and extra generosity from the parishes will enable the Commissioners to continue to fulfil their core responsibility of supporting the Church's ministry in poorer areas of the country for this and successive generations.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the estimated costs of the options for the temporary housing of the Scottish Parliament after it is elected in 1999. [34280]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 13 March 1998]: In preparing assessments of options for interim accommodation for the Scottish Parliament, my officials made outline estimates of the comparative capital and running costs of solutions based on the Church of Scotland Assembly Hall on the Mound, Edinburgh; the Old Royal High School building, Edinburgh; and the former Glasgow High School complex at Charing Cross, Glasgow. These estimates included capital costs of necessary upgrading of the buildings and rent and rates over a two year period. The costs covered office accommodation required by the Parliament. For the Assembly Hall option, the office accommodation element was based on buildings currently occupied by the City of Edinburgh Council at George IV Bridge and Parliament Square. The respective estimated costs were as follows:

	£ million
Old Royal High School, Edinburgh	5
Assembly Hall	6
Charing Cross, Glasgow	3

The estimates did not include heating, lighting, security or other building-related services.

Fish Farming Colleges

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Drumbeat report and addendum into the future of the Seafield Centre fish farming college at Kishorn, Ross-Shire; if he will list all those industry companies consulted over its compilation; and if he will make a statement; [37882]

(2) what estimate he has made of the projected annual balance sheet of the Seafield Centre fish farming college at Kishorn, Ross-Shire; and if he will make a statement. [37883]

Mr. Wilson: The Drumbeat Report was commissioned by Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I understand that it is already publicly available and will make arrangements to place copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Seafield Centre is a faculty of Inverness College. The latest audited annual accounts for Inverness College are for 1996–97. The college budget for 1998–99 is still in preparation.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those facilities approved by the Scottish Qualifications Authority in marine aquaculture; what plans he has in respect of the fish farming college at Kishorn, Ross-Shire, Dunstaffnage, Argyll and the North Atlantic Fisheries College at Scalloway, Shetland; and if he will make a statement. [37884]

Mr. Wilson: The Scottish Qualifications Authority approves the following centres to deliver education and training leading to qualifications in various aspects of marine aquaculture.

Aberdeen College

Angus College

The Barony College

Banff and Buchan College of Further Education

Borders College
Dumfries and Galloway College
Dundee College
Elmwood College
Lews Castle College
Inverness College
Shetland College of Further Education
Fish Industry Training Association
Marine Harvest McConnell
North Atlantic Fisheries
Rural Pursuits Ltd
Scottish Aquaculture Training Association
Shetland Fisheries Training Association.

Responsibility for the Seafield Fish Farming Training Centre at Kishorn rests with the Board of Management of Inverness College. The Dunstaffnage Marine Laboratory is funded and managed by the Natural Environment Research Council and the North Atlantic Fisheries College is managed by an independent charitable trust. I have no locus to intervene in the future plans for any of these facilities.

Legg-Calves-Perthes Syndrome

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of new cases of Legg-Calves-Perthes syndrome in each of the Scottish health board areas for each of the last five years, indicating the percentage of the population which each of these figures represent. [36812]

Mr. Galbraith: The latest available information by Health Board area, on the number and rate per 100,000 of population of new cases, under 16 years, of Legg-Calves-Perthes Syndrome for each year from 1991 is provided in the table.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 578, what discussions he has had with individual principals of Scottish (a) universities, (b) colleges and (c) further education colleges regarding the possibility of increasing the proportion of non-Scottish United Kingdom students who are given direct entry into second year; what conclusions were reached; what estimate he has made of the cost to Scottish educational institutions of the resultant reduction in annual full-time equivalent places; and if he will make a statement. [38340]

Mr. Wilson: I have not met the Principal of any Scottish university, higher or further education college specifically to discuss the possibility of increasing the proportion of non-Scottish UK-domiciled students who are given direct entry into second year.

The Report of the Scottish Committee of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education (the 'Garrick Report') recommended to higher education providers that they should clearly specify their requirements for combinations of A levels which will lead to entry with advanced standing within the new qualifications framework. In our response to the Garrick Report, published on 25 February and available from the Library of this House, we welcomed this recommendation. The Government believe that higher education providers should give more consideration for entry into second year for candidates with appropriate combinations of A levels and, in due course, Advanced Highers. However, as this is for the institutions themselves to consider and take forward, no estimate has been made of the cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Abuse

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what programmes and funding are being made available this year by the Government to provide education in schools on the dangers of drug abuse; and if he will indicate the respective contributions of his Department and the Department for Education and Employment. [37367]

Mr. George Howarth: The National Curriculum sets out the minimum requirements for drugs education in schools. Beyond this, it is for individual schools to decide on their drugs education programmes in the light of their needs and circumstances.

The Department for Education and Employment is making £7 million of support available to all local education authorities in England in 1998–99, through the Standards Fund programme, to assist primary and secondary schools and the youth service to deliver effective education about drugs, including alcohol and tobacco. In addition, as part of its £1.9 million annual grants programme, the Home Office Drugs Prevention Initiative is supporting work in a limited number of schools in developing their drugs education programmes. The results of this work will be disseminated nationally over the course of this year.

Youth Justice

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responses received (a) to the draft Crime and Disorder Bill and (b) from local authorities on the proposed duty to produce a youth justice plan. [37365]

Mr. Michael: The Government's proposal to place a duty on local authorities with social services and education responsibilities, to formulate and implement an annual youth justice plan covering the provision of youth justice services and youth offending teams, was set out in the consultation paper "New National and Local Focus on Youth Crime", published in October. Sixteen local authorities commented specifically on the proposal for a youth justice plan. Overall, they gave a broad welcome to the proposal and commented on the need for proper links between youth justice plans and other local plans, in particular, the children's services plan drawn up by local authorities and the policing plan issued by police authorities. A summary of the responses to the consultation paper was placed in the Library on 15 December 1997.

The proposal for a youth justice plan was reflected in the White Paper "No More Excuses—A New Approach to Tackling Youth Crime in England and Wales", published in November, and is now contained in clause 37 of the Crime and Disorder Bill.

The preparation of youth justice plans and their relationship with other local plans will be addressed in guidance to local authorities and the other relevant local agencies.

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom the proposed youth offending teams will be accountable. [37363]

Mr. Michael: Clause 36 of the Crime and Disorder Bill places the responsibility for establishing youth offending teams on the local authority with education and social services responsibilities in the area. Youth offending teams will therefore be accountable to that local authority for the way they discharge their statutory duties.

In practice, we expect youth offending teams to be accountable to a group of chief officers from the local authority and from those agencies placed under a duty by clause 36 to co-operate with the local authority in establishing a youth offending team. They are the police, the probation service and the health authority. This group will in turn account to the local authority, the police authority, the probation committee and the health authority. It is expected that where there are two tiers of local authority, there would be consultation with the District Authorities and to ensure coherence with the work of Crime Prevention Partnerships and the work of Drug Action Teams.

Clause 37 of the Bill also places a duty on local authorities, after consultation with the police authority, probation committee and health authority, to formulate and implement an annual youth justice plan covering the provision of youth offending teams and youth justice services. This plan will be published and submitted to the Youth Justice Board established under clause 38, which will be able to hold the local authority and the other agencies to account for the arrangements for teams and services in their area.

Security Industry

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to regulate the security industry; and if he will make a statement. [37526]

Mr. Michael: We intend to introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry as soon as possible but pressures on Parliamentary time constitute an obstacle to early legislation, as we warned would be the case when we pressed the last Government for early legislation before the election. We have recently completed a consultation exercise with the industry and others on the best way to provide a comprehensive, effective and streamlined system for the whole of the private security industry. It is clear from the responses that there is general support for our approach from the industry itself, as well as from other respondents, and we hope to put forward firm proposals for regulation later this year. Our aim is to build a consensus behind legislative proposals in order to be able to move more quickly and effectively as soon as Parliamentary time becomes available.

Airline Liaison Officers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training or guidance is currently received by airline liaison officers; and how this is provided. [37724]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Airline liaison officers are selected from within an Immigration Service management grade (Chief Immigration Officer) on the basis of experience and suitability against well defined criteria. After selection and before posting, airline liaison officers attend a training course devised and run by the Immigration Service Carriers Liaison Unit, the office responsible for managing the airline liaison officer network. They are also provided with a manual which contains operational guidance and instructions. Airline liaison officers are instructed to contact the Carriers Liaison Unit for advice and guidance whenever necessary.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many airline liaison officers are currently in post overseas; and in which countries they serve. [37722]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office currently has five airline liaison officers based overseas at the British High Commissions in Ghana (Accra), Kenya (Nairobi), India (New Delhi), Sri Lanka (Colombo) and Bangladesh (Dhaka).

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the annual cost is of maintaining airline liaison officers overseas; and what assessment he has made of this expenditure in terms of value for money. [37723]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The budget, including the initial costs of providing the necessary support services for the network of five airline liaison officers, is £925,000 in the first year of operation and £575,000 annually thereafter. The estimated annual saving to the United Kingdom after the first full year of operation is just under £19 million.

Passports (Children)

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on passports for children. [38434]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Following a policy review, I have accepted the Passport Agency's recommendation that, on the grounds of improved security, of making child abduction more difficult, of facilitating travel and of maintaining the Agency's efficiency and effectiveness, all children should be required to hold their own passport. This change in policy will take effect from 5 October 1998, when the Agency plan to begin introducing a new, more secure British passport. Children already included on their parents' passports will not be affected by this change until the passport is changed.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people are currently detained by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; how many have been detained in each of the last five years; and at what annual cost; [38163]

(2) how many of the people detained by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate have been detained for longer than three months in each of the last three years. [38165]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Information on persons detained under sole Immigration Act powers in the United Kingdom for longer than three months is available only for the position as at 31 March 1998. As at that date, 350 such persons were recorded as having been detained continuously for over three months.

The available information relating to all persons detained under Immigration Act powers in immigration detention centres and prisons in the United Kingdom at given points in time, is contained in table 1.

The annual costs of detention to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are given in table 2.

[1] Costs are net costs calculated on an accruals accounting basis. They include staff, accommodation, overheads and full running costs, and take account of depreciation of fixed assets.
[2] The data exclude costs to the Prison Service.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the daily average cost to public funds of detaining a person by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [38162]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The current average daily cost of detaining a person within the Immigration Service detention estate is £76. Some immigration detainees are held in Prison Service accommodation where the average daily cost in 1996–97 was £68, although these costs are not passed on to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. The quoted costs include headquarters overheads.

Immigration Advisory Service

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what factors underlie the number of staff at the Immigration Advisory Service, Scottish Office; [38158]

(2) what factors underlie the proposed reduction in the number of staff at the Immigration Advisory Service, Scottish Office. [37910]

Ms Quin: The staffing arrangements of the Immigration Advisory Service are a matter for the Trustees.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum cases are dealt with in the Immigration Advisory Service Office based in (a) Birmingham, (b) Cardiff, (c) Central London, (d) Gatwick, (e) Glasgow, (f) Hounslow, (g) Leeds and (h) Manchester. [37911]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table.

Central London[1]	423
Hounslow	536

There is no Immigration Advisory Service office at Gatwick.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the availability of free advice on immigration and asylum law in Scotland. [38159]

Ms Quin: The Immigration Advisory Service receives a grant from the Home Office under section 23 of the Immigration Act 1971. It is open to appellants in Scotland to seek free advice from the Immigration Advisory Service or from any other voluntary organisation.

Internet Watch Foundation

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1998, Official Report, column 516, who will undertake the review of the Internet Watch Foundation; what arrangements are being made to allow interested parties to submit their views to the review team; and if the report will be published. [37142]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The review will be undertaken by outside consultants. The Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) has the lead in taking forward the review in view of that Department's responsibility for regulation of the industry, and has the full support of the Home Office. DTI officials will be meeting representatives from the Home Office, Internet Watch Foundation (IWF), Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and National Children's Homes (Action for Children) after Easter to discuss the finer details of the review. However, it is envisaged that the review will focus on:

Progress on the removal of illegal material, including the number of reports received, time taken to turn them around, compliance of Internet Service Providers with IWF advice and the possibility of establishing a system to provide more reliable feedback on results;

Structure of the IWF and representation of interested parties.

Next priorities for IWF—a broader focus than child pornography. New priorities might include adult pornography, racism, breaches of copyright and protection from legal but potentially harmful material;

Awareness of the Internet industry and consumers of the IWF and or rating and filtering tools for self protection and how far this awareness translates into usage.

Once the full specification of the review has been agreed, applications will be invited from interested parties who may wish to carry out the review. It will be open to anyone who wishes to do so to submit views to the team which is appointed. The report of the review is likely to be published in the Autumn.

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1998, Official Report, column 516, if he will extend the review of the operations of the Internet Watch Foundation to include an assessment of the effectiveness of the current procedures of (a) the Metropolitan Police, (b) other police forces and (c) the National Criminal Intelligence Service, in responding to reports on potentially illegal child pornography from the IWF. [37141]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The focus of the review announced by the Government on 3 March will be the work of the Internet Watch Foundation (IWF), its structure and composition, the effectiveness of its arrangements for dealing with reports of potentially illegal material, extension of its priorities for action and promoting awareness of its work.

The review will look at the effectiveness of the administrative procedures for passing on information about potentially illegal material to individual police forces and for collating information about the use to which the information has been put, including resulting prosecutions. Any procedural difficulties will be highlighted in the report. The operational effectiveness of the Metropolitan Police, other police forces and the National Criminal Intelligence Service in responding to reports which they receive from the IWF on potentially illegal child pornography is beyond the scope of the current proposals.

The efficiency of the police response to the information received from IWF is a matter for the force concerned.

British Horseracing Board

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the British Horseracing Board. [37745]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 6 April 1998]: My right hon. Friend has not met the British Horseracing Board (BHB). The Home Office has regular contact with the BHB at official level. I expect to be meeting Board members soon and I have had several informal contacts with members of the Board.

Fraud

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the Law Commission to review the law on fraud. [38520]

Mr. Straw: I have today asked the Law Commission to undertake a review of the law on fraud. The terms of reference for this review are:

"As part of their programme of work on dishonesty, to examine the law on fraud, and in particular to consider whether it is readily comprehensible to juries;

is adequate for effective prosecution;

is fair to potential defendants;

meets the need of developing technology including electronic means of transfer; and to make recommendations to improve the law in these respects with all due expedition. In making these recommendations to consider whether a general offence of fraud would improve the criminal law."

Fire Safety

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report of the Community Fire Safety Task Force in relation to fire safety in England and Wales. [38521]

Mr. George Howarth: I am pleased to announce today that the Government have accepted all the main recommendations of the Community Fire Safety Task Force.

We have pledged quite clearly our determination and commitment to providing safer communities. The fire service has a vital role to play in helping to achieve a safer society, not just by fighting fires, but by reducing the number of fires, deaths and casualties.

The Community Fire Safety Task Force were established to advise on a new strategy for England and Wales to reduce significantly the incidence of fire in the home. The report they produced last November was welcomed as an enormous opportunity both for the Government and the fire service to reduce the pain and suffering caused by dwelling fires.

I made it clear when the report was published that we wanted to hear the views of chief officers, fire authorities and the Unions, all of whom have a crucial role to play in translating the strategy into action. I am pleased to say that the response to the Task Force report has provided a strong mandate for almost all of their key proposals and for a refocusing of effort towards prevention and safety.

I am writing to those same organisations today to explain how we intend to take the strategy forward. In particular, I want to see the efforts of Government, fire authorities and other local agencies integrated and co-ordinated as the Task Force recommended, so that the whole effort achieves more than the sum of its parts. We shall be taking steps to put these arrangements in place shortly. I also accept, with the strong endorsement of the fire service, the recommendation that community fire safety should be made a statutory duty.

Community Fire Safety must become a core activity of the fire service, and we must work in partnership with other agencies and with business to eliminate preventable fires. The success of this approach will mean a safer society for us all.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publish a Management Statement for the Criminal Cases Review Commission. [38522]

Mr. Michael: The Management Statement for the Criminal Cases Review Commission has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. The Statement sets out the mission and objectives of the Commission, its accountability to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and, through my right hon. Friend to Parliament, and the division of responsibilities between the Commission and the Home Office. The Management Statement is a key document for any non-departmental public body, and I commend that for the Commission to the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Firearms

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to ban handguns in Northern Ireland. [32572]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) on 2 April 1998, Official Report, column 608.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she will publish legislative proposals arising from the review of the Firearms (NI) Order 1981. [32811]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 March 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) on 2 April 1998, Official Report, column 608.

Irish Medium Education

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council has discussed Irish-medium education; and if she will make a statement. [33593]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Education and Culture Sub-Committee of the Anglo Irish Intergovernmental Council regularly discusses Irish-medium education. At its meetings on 7 February, 8 May and 14 November, it discussed the inclusion of the Irish language in the National curriculum in English schools.

The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference has discussed Irish- medium education at 6 meetings since the beginning of 1995. The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference was established under the framework of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council.

Housing Development

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her policy with respect to (a) building on green belt land and (b) the proportion of brownfield sites to be used for future housing. [37161]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Policy on buildings on green belt land in Northern Ireland is set out in the publication "A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland", published in September 1993, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The draft Regional strategic Framework will be issued for public consideration within the next few months and this document will address, among other matters, the question of the use of recycled land.

Staff Appointments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which staff appointments in (a) her Private Office, (b) the Northern Ireland Office and (c) the Northern Ireland Civil Service are subject to her personal choice. [37164]

Marjorie Mowlam: Appointments made in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Civil Service are made on the basis of merit and through fair and open competition.

As Secretary of State I do not engage in the process by which staff in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Civil Service are selected for appointment. However, my approval is obtained before some selections for appointment are finalised. These posts include those at NI Permanent Secretary level, some in my Private Office (as recommended by Dr. Maurice Hayes in his 1997 report on "Staff Deployment in the NICS"), where the nature of the work and the working relationship involved make it appropriate to do so.

The post of Head of the NI Civil Service and the three most senior posts in the NIO are subject to approval by the Prime Minister.

Incomes

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the average (a) annual income and (b) hourly rate of pay in Northern Ireland. [37264]

Mr. Ingram: In 1996–97 the average annual income in Northern Ireland was £9,530. The latest earning figures available are for April 1997 at which date the average hourly rate of pay for adult employees (both full and part-time) was £7.58.

Source:

Incomes—Northern Ireland Family Expenditure Survey 1996–97
Earnings—Northern Ireland New Earnings Survey, April 1997.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of those employed in Northern Ireland earn less than £4 per hour; and if she will make a statement. [37265]

Mr. Ingram: The latest figures available are for April 1997 at which date 17.8 per cent. of adult employees (both full and part-time) earned less than £4.00 (excluding overtime) per hour.

Source:

Northern Ireland New Earnings Survey, April 1997.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the impact of a minimum wage in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [37266]

Mr. Ingram: The Government have appointed the Low Pay Commission to gather evidence, assess it and make recommendations in relation to the National Minimum Wage. The Commission visited Northern Ireland in October for that purpose. My Department has also contributed fully to the UK-wide Government evidence presented to the Commission. The Commission has received the recent NIEC report on the extent and nature of low pay in Northern Ireland. The report shows Northern Ireland to be significantly more affected by low pay than other UK regions. The National Minimum Wage will therefore have particular importance for Northern Ireland.

Peace Line, Belfast

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will take measures to reinstate those sections of the peace line in north and west Belfast which have been taken down in recent months; and if she will make a statement. [37784]

Mr. Ingram: No sections of the peaceline in north and west Belfast have been taken down by the security forces in recent months. Any sections removed or damaged by unauthorised persons are repaired immediately.

Housing

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the Housing Executive's capital programme each year since 1987–88 has been spent on accommodation in (a) Catholic/nationalist and (b) Protestant/unionist areas. [37783]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Housing Executive capital schemes are developed on the basis of targeting those in greatest need through an objective assessment of housing requirements. No information is recorded on a religious apportionment of those programmes.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Housing Executive dwellings in Belfast are currently unoccupied by tenants to whom the Housing Executive has let these properties; and if she will make a statement. [37782]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose Chief Executive has advised me that, at 31 March 1998, the Executive is aware of 93 properties let to tenants, but unoccupied. Of these 72 are temporarily unoccupied while major improvements are carried out. The remaining 21 are the subject of Abandonment Notices, the Executive having evidence that the properties are not being used by the tenant as their main home. Abandonment Notices are served following a thorough investigation and are the culmination of a legal process to recover the property.

Paramilitary Activity (Collusion Allegations)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will seek the advice of the UN Special Rapporteur on Extra-Legal, Summary and Arbitrary Executions on the conduct of an investigation into allegations of collusion between members of the security forces and paramilitary groups. [37740]

Marjorie Mowlam: No. We have national experts well placed to offer any necessary advice and to make recommendations on the issues that a UN Rapporteur would be likely to cover.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average RUC call out and response time over the past four years for each category of reported incident. [37807]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is not currently available. However the Command and Control system is designed to provide such information; its installation is ongoing and should be completed province-wide by October 1998.

Referendum Campaign

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she plans to sanction her Department's Director of Information's proposals relating to a possible referendum campaign, with particular reference to the involvement of the Archbishop of Armagh; if she will place a copy of the proposals in the Library; and if she will make a statement. [37820]

Marjorie Mowlam: The proposals drawn up in relation to a possible referendum campaign will be considered in the light of events. If a referendum is to be held, some of the proposals will be implemented and others will be considered.

However, as I have made clear, Dr. Eames had no knowledge of the communications document. I have also assured Archbishop Eames that at no stage was there any intention or suggestion that anyone in the NIO was seeking to bring any pressure on him or any other church leader in terms of what they might say about the talks process or anything else. I greatly respect Dr. Eames and his independence as a Church leader as I do his integrity and that of the other Church leaders.

The main point of the paper was to develop a strategy for informing the Northern Ireland public about the content of any agreement so that individual voters can make up their own minds. A public information telephone line has already been set up for this purpose.

As the leaked document was an internal working paper I do not intend to place it in the Library of the House.

Mediation Network

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 27, what evaluation she made, prior to granting funding to Mediation Network, of evidence that one of its advisers is a member of a United States religious sect. [37822]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None.

"Women Seen and Heard"

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will place a copy of the document "Women Seen and Heard" in the Library. [37178]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 April 1998]: I have made arrangements to have copies of this Report placed in the Library.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the reasons for the revocation of licences for each of the 18 former life sentence prisoners for whom this is applicable. [37181]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Statute provides that the licence of an indeterminate sentence prisoner can be revoked at any time by the Secretary of State. In each case, the overriding reason for licence revocation was for the protection of the public.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the members of the Life Sentence Review Board, indicating their profession, qualifications and perceived religious/community background and the declarations of interest each has registered. [37175]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The Life Sentence Review Board is not a statutory body and there is no formal registration requirement on its members.

The Life Sentence Review Board is chaired by the Permanent Under Secretary of the Northern Ireland Office, Mr. Joe Pilling, and includes among its members senior Northern Ireland Office officials, a psychologist and a medical officer of the Department of Health and Social Services. The Chief Probation Officer and a Consultant Forensic Psychiatrist attend the Board in a professional advisory capacity. The Governors of HMP Maze and HMP Maghaberry also attend.

The identities of the members of the Board, with the exception of the Permanent Under Secretary, are not made public for security reasons. The members of the Board are all full-time civil servants drawn from both the Home Civil Service and the Northern Ireland Civil Service. Their membership is by virtue of the posts they hold within the Northern Ireland Office, including the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

It would be inappropriate to disclose the perceived community background of the individual members of the Review Board. The confidentiality of monitoring information is protected under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

As already indicated, among the members of the Board, are a professionally qualified Psychologist and medical practitioner.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates the two life-sentence prisoners released on licence were subsequently reconvicted for scheduled offences; and what their present position is as regards sentence. [37180]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Of the two prisoners re-convicted for serious terrorist offences, one was sentenced on 17 December 1993 and the other on 18 May 1995. Following licence revocation each has resumed the status of an indeterminate sentence prisoner. The stage at which each case will be reviewed by the Life Sentence Review Board will be determined by means of periodical review in accordance with normal life sentence review procedures.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times, and on what dates, the Life Sentence Review Board has met in the last three years; and how many cases it has considered on each occasion. [37174]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The Life Sentence Review Board meets five times per year. The other information requested is set out in the table.

Date of meeting	Number of cases
7 February 1995	5
4 April 1995	10
6 June 1995	9
17 October 1995	9
12 December 1995	8
20 February 1996	7

[1] One individual case was considered at two successive meetings during 1997 as the Board requested additional information.

Note:

Some cases will, of course, have been considered more than once during this 3 year time span where the Board deferred them for periods of one or two years.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the cost of resolving the millennium computer problem in the National Health Service; how much money has been spent on this to date; and if she will make a statement. [37933]

Mr. Worthington: The cost of resolving the millennium computer problem in the Northern Ireland Health and Personal Social Services currently stands at £5 million in respect of Information Management and Technology (IM&T) systems. No estimates are yet available for non-IT equipment.

There are as yet no records of what has been spent to date. This will become clear in the next returns due from HPSS organisations in May 1998.

The HSS Executive has been promoting awareness of HPSS Year 2000 issues since 1996. The HPSS programme is broadly in line with the GB timescale and the requirement for regular updates on progress will fall into line with GB from the next return date which is due in June 1998. It is not expected that compliance of all equipment will be achieved by the December 1998 target date. Preparations should however be complete in time for the millennium.

Water Service

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the perceived religious affiliation breakdown of the persons who were interviewed by the last promotion board of the Northern Ireland Water Service for professional and technical staff; [38097]

(2) how many persons appeared before the last promotion board for the Northern Ireland Water Service; and how many of those have since been promoted; [38138]

(3) by how much she intends to increase water charges to each class of consumer; what sums she intends to raise in total; and for what purposes such sums will be used; [38083]

(4) how many officers of each professional and technical grade are employed at Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters; [38096]

(5) how many persons at what grades are employed in design in (a) the Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters and (b) in each division; and from where and by whom the persons working in the divisions are supervised; [38090]

(6) if she will publish a table to show the religious affiliation breakdown of each grade of staff in each of the Northern Ireland Water Service divisions and at Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters; [38091]

(7) what checks are carried out on claims made as to qualifications held by persons employed in each professional and technical grade and in each administrative grade in the Northern Ireland Water Service; [38092]

(8) if she will publish a table to show for each of the Northern Ireland Water Service divisions the number of (a) professional and technical officers, (b) higher professional and technical officers and (c) senior professional and technical officers employed, indicating the equivalent figures for the administration in each division and giving the dates of the last promotion board for these posts; [38093]

(9) what reports on the Northern Ireland Water Service have been published by (a) the Fair Employment Agency and (b) the Fair Employment Commission; [38094]

(10) how many persons are employed at Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters; and at what grade. [38095]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Water Service under its chief executive, Mr. H. R. F. Plester. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. R. F. Plester to Mr. William Ross, dated 7 April 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland about Water Service staffing and charging issues.

I shall answer each in the order of their receipt, and because some are very closely interlinked and worded I think it is necessary, to ensure clarity, that I should set out the question in full before each answer.

1. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what was the perceived religious affiliation breakdown of the persons who were interviewed by the last promotion board of the Northern Ireland Water Service for professional and technical staff.

Because of its duties of confidentiality to its staff the Department does not publish data on individual promotion competitions from which their religious affiliation could be deduced. Unauthorised disclosure of such information would constitute an offence under Section 19 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989. However, aggregated information is available in the Sixth Report of the Equal Opportunities Unit. A copy of this is available in the House of Commons Library.

2. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many persons appeared before the last promotion board for the Northern Ireland Water Service; and how many of those have since been promoted.

Five people were interviewed for the post of Telemetry Operations, Supervisor Professional Technical Officer level within Northern Division and one has since been promoted into this post.

3. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, by how much she intends to increase water charges to each class of consumer; what sums she intends to raise in total; and for what purposes such sums will be used.

The annual revision of the Water Service's metered water charges, paid by industrial commercial and agricultural users, and trade effluent charges paid by dischargers, has just taken place. The proposed new rates for 1998/99 are as follows:

Metered Water Charges

The proposed volumetric charge for 1998/99 is 72.34 pence per cubic metre. This is an increase of 6.28% on the 1997/98 charges of 68.13 pence. The standing charges for metered supplies have not been increased. They remain within the annual charge rate of £46 for a supply pipe of 15 mm or less, up to £1502 for a supply pipe greater than 100 mm.

Trade Effluent Charges

The proposed standard trade effluent charge for 1998/99 remains at the level for 1997/98. This is 37.06 pence per cubic metre. While the standard charge has not altered overall there has been re-adjustment of the components that make it up under the "Mogden Formula", which is the standard water industry methodology for calculating this charge. These charge components are reception and conveyance, volumetric treatment, biological treatment, sludge treatment and disposal. These adjustments could affect the bills of trade effluent dischargers upwards or downwards depending upon the volume and strength of their effluents.

It is estimated that the sums raised by these charges during 1998/99 will be approximately £30 million for metered water and £3.9 million for trade effluent. These charges are levied to ensure that those businesses using these facilities pay proportionately for the services they receive and that cross-subsidisation amongst consumers is reduced. A portion of the metered water charge increase is designed to continue the phased reduction of an historic element of cross-subsidy of metered water users by regional ratepayers.

4. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many officers of each professional and technical grade are employed at Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters.

	Number
Grade 3	1
Grade 6	3

Senior Scientific Officer	3

5. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many persons at what grades are employed in design in (a) the Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters and (b) in each division; and from where and by whom the persons working in the divisions are supervised.

Design staff are not grouped within Water Service Headquarters or within its operational Divisions. They all come under Water Service's Development Directorate and its senior level management. They are located on either a team or $\frac{1}{2}$ team basis at 4 centres, Ballymena, Belfast, Craigavon and Londonderry. Each team, or $\frac{1}{2}$ team, is supervised by its senior officer at the location. Details of the staff by grade and location are tabled below.

* Technical Grade 1

6. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if she will publish a table to show the religious affiliation breakdown of each grade of staff in each of the Northern Ireland Water Service divisions and at Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters.

Because of its duties of confidentiality the Department does not publish information at the level of disaggregation requested. However, information on composition by grade at Departmental level is available in the Sixth Report of the Equal Opportunities Unit, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. The Northern Ireland Civil Service is an equal opportunities employer and is committed to appointment and progression on merit.

7. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what checks are carried out on claims made as to qualifications held by persons employed in each professional and technical grade and in each administrative grade in the Northern Ireland Water Service.

Upon recruitment, or when gaining qualifications in-service, Water Service staff are required to submit for inspection the original certification relating to their qualifications.

8. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if she will publish a table to show for each of the Northern Ireland Water Service divisions the number of (a) professional and technical officers, (b) higher professional and technical officers and (c) senior professional and technical officers employed, indicating the equivalent figures for the administration in each division and giving the dates of the last promotion board for these posts.

The information requested is shown in the table.

9. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what reports on the Northern Ireland Water Service have been published by (a) the Fair Employment Agency and (b) the Fair Employment Commission.

The Fair Employment Commission, which succeeded the Fair Employment Agency in 1989, has advised that it does not produce reports on individual Departments or Agencies but takes the Northern Ireland Civil Service as a whole for monitoring purposes.

10. To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many persons are employed at Northern Ireland Water Service Headquarters; and at what grade.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those promoted in each of the professional and technical grades since the last Northern Ireland Water Service promotion board fall into each religious affiliation category. [38137]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For reasons of confidentiality, information on religious affiliation is not published at the level of disaggregation requested. However, aggregated information on the outcome of promotion boards by occupational group can be obtained from the Sixth Report of the Equal Opportunities Unit, a copy of which is in the Library.

Parades Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the names and addresses of the persons appointed as facilitators to aid the Parades Commission, indicating the level of payments to be made to them and the areas which have been allocated to them. [38087]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently 7 authorised officers acting in a part-time capacity on behalf of the Parades Commission. Their task is to gather information on disputes surrounding parades across Northern Ireland and to monitor developments within various locations. They will also assist with attempts to achieve local accommodation.

The authorised officers are employed, trained and monitored by the Mediation Network for Northern Ireland and act on behalf of the Parades Commission, which is charged for this service. Their names are known to various groups in particular locations where they are currently assigned, but, given the sensitive nature of their work, I do not consider it appropriate to publish a list of their names and addresses.

Authorised officers are currently working in the following areas:

Belfast
Pomeroy
Bellaghy
Dunloy
Strabane
Newtownbutler
Roslea
Armagh
Keady
Newry
Lurgan
Ballycastle
Crumlin.

Utilities (Charges)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the percentage by which the cost of (a) water, (b) household coal, (c) gas and (d) electricity for (i) domestic and (ii) industrial consumers in Northern Ireland varies from the average cost of (a) to (d) in Great Britain. [38084]

Mr. Ingram: The information is as follows:

(a) The regional rate contribution to water and sewerage services for the average domestic ratepayer in Northern Ireland 1997–98 was approximately 4 per cent. higher than the equivalent average figure in Scotland and approximately 46 per cent. lower than the average for England and Wales.

The charge to industrial consumers for metered water was 68.13p/m^3 in Northern Ireland in 1997/98 compared with regional charges ranging from 38.5p/m^3 to 109.15 p/m^3 in GB.

(b) An average figure indicating the percentage by which the cost of household coal in Northern Ireland varies from that in GB is not available.

(c) Domestic gas prices in Northern Ireland are approximately 8 per cent. higher than the corresponding average price in Great Britain.

(d) Domestic electricity prices in Northern Ireland and approximately 22 per cent. higher than the corresponding average price in Great Britain.

Comparisons of gas and electricity prices for industrial consumers are not possible as they are subject to confidential contracts between gas and electricity suppliers and consumers in both Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

Inward Investment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the IDB has taken persons and firms considering inward investment to Northern Ireland to (a) each parliamentary constituency and (b) each council area in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years or each of the last three financial years if more convenient. [38086]

Mr. Ingram: The information required to answer part (a) is not available and would incur disproportionate costs to extract. Visits arranged by IDB to Northern Ireland District Council Areas for potential inward investors in the years 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 are as follows:

CRISP Scheme, Dungiven

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of the CRISP scheme presently being carried out on Main Street, Dungiven; and how much of the total cost falls to (a) the IFI, (b) the DOE, (c) the Roads Service, (d) Limavady Council, (e) NIE and (f) BT. [38082]

Mr. Paul Murphy: DOE's contribution from CRISP funds and its environmental improvement budget was £121,500. Roads Service costs were £25,000. The local group, who let the contract for the CRISP scheme, negotiated contributions from IFI, Limavady Council, NIE and BT but the precise amounts contributed are for these bodies to disclose.

Driving Licences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland hold a driving licence; what percentage this represents of all persons of the age of 17 years or over, broken down into those age bands used by the licensing authority. [38085]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to Driver and Vehicle Licensing of Northern Ireland, under its chief executive, Mr. Brendan Magee. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brendan Magee to Mr. William Ross, dated 6 April 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question requesting information on the number of people in Northern Ireland holding driving licences.

As at 3 April 1998 there were 1,082,936 licence holders on DVLNI's Driver Licensing computer system. This figure included provisional and full licences, individuals who have moved from Northern Ireland but where we have not been notified of the move, and some deceased where we have not been informed of their death.

The figure of 1,082,936 represents 88.7% of the population of Northern Ireland who are over 17 years of age.

The age bands used by DVLNI are above and below age 70. There are 987,466 licence holders aged below 70 and 95,470 above 70 years of age.

Banks

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will investigate allegations of overcharging practices in Northern Ireland banks. [38088]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

There are no plans to investigate such allegations. The Northern Irish bank, against which most of the allegations of overcharging have been made, has announced that it will carry out its own investigation and that it will make the results public. If evidence of overcharging is found it will take appropriate action and the customers involved will be compensated.

HEALTH

Health Records (Access)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will assess the advantages of recommending a reasonable level of photocopy charges to be paid by patients seeking access to their records under the Access to Health Records Act 1990; and if he will make a statement. [27827]

Mr. Milburn: The Access to Health Records Act 1990 requires that charges should not exceed the cost of making a copy and posting it, and guidance to National Health Service organisations has made it quite clear that the actual cost is the maximum that should be charged. The actual cost will differ from case to case and can be determined only by the specific organisation involved. Recommending a charge greater than the actual cost in any particular case would contravene the requirements of the Act, and recommending charges consistently lower than actual costs would increase NHS costs. Therefore, the responsibility for determining reasonable charges must remain with individual organisations.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the quantity of (a) oil, (b) gas and (c) electricity purchased for the heating, lighting and powering of all accommodation occupied by his Department within the United Kingdom in each year since 1989–90; and what was the total cost in real terms for (a) to (c) in each year. [36167]

Ms Jowell: Since 1990 the Department has monitored and recorded its energy consumption and costs on a basis agreed with the former Department of the Environment. The figures cover the majority of the administrative estate for which the Department has been directly responsible. They are reported annually to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and are set out in the table.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of mesothelioma and asbestos-related diseases have been reported during each of the last three years. [37061]

Mr. Boateng: Neither condition is reportable under a system of statutory notification but several sources of data are available which are indicative of the numbers suffering from these diseases.

The Department collects data in the Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) on the number of hospital admissions and day cases per year classified by disease. They will not accurately reflect the number of new cases in that year because some patients will have readmissions following diagnosis in earlier years, some have multiple admissions in a year, and some are treated as hospital out patients or may not go to hospital at all and so do not feature in HES data. The table gives information on hospital admissions and day cases for the three most recent years available for mesothelioma and asbestos-related disease.

Additional data on new mesothelioma cases are available from the national cancer registration system which strives for complete case ascertainment. The most recent data available are for 1989–91.

The Department of Social Security has data on the number of new claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit made each year but they will exclude those who have these diseases but do not claim benefit.

Figures of the numbers of diagnosed cases of asbestos-related diseases, made in connection with claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit are shown in the table:

Mental Illness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the availability of care for those suffering from mental illness. [37258]

Mr. Boateng: We have established the independent reference group to consider long stay hospital closure plans to ensure no more hospitals are closed without proper or alternative services being available.

Breast Screening

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many breast units using two view mammography at all breast screening rounds (a) reached and (b) failed to reach the national expected standard for breast cancer detection last year; [37527]

(2) how many breast units using single view mammography at incident breast screening rounds (a) reached and (b) failed to reach the national expected standard for breast cancer detection last year. [37528]

Mr. Boateng: All of the eight breast screening units in the United Kingdom currently using two-view mammography at all breast screening rounds met the target standardised cancer detection ratio last year. Of the 87 breast screening units in the UK using single view mammography at incident breast screening rounds, 62 achieved the target standardised breast cancer detection ratio.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost per cancer detected of single view mammography at incident breast screening rounds last year; [37530]

(2) what was the cost per cancer detected of two view mammography at incident breast screening rounds last year. [37532]

Mr. Boateng: The National Health Service breast screening programme has commissioned a study to look at the cost effectiveness of both single-view and two-view mammography. The results of this study are expected later this year.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of additional breast cancers which would be detected per year if two view mammography were undertaken at incident breast screening rounds in all breast units; [37529]

(2) what plans he has to review national guidance on the use of two view mammography for breast screening. [37542]

Mr. Boateng: All breast screening units currently take two mammographic views of the breast at a woman's first visit to the screening programme, and it is open to them to use two-view mammography at subsequent screening rounds.

The cancer screening evaluation unit, which is funded by the Department, is currently reviewing the advantages of two view mammography for all screening rounds. This review is due to be completed later this year. We will assess the case for requiring all units to take views at every screening round in the light of the findings of this review. This assessment will also take account of the outcome of research currently being carried out into other changes that might be made to improve the quality of the service offered to women. This research covers extending the breast screening programme to invite women aged 40–50, routinely inviting women aged 65 and over, and reducing the interval between screens.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlie the higher standardised detection ratio for the first round of breast screening relative to subsequent rounds. [37832]

Mr. Boateng: The breast screening programme was introduced in 1988, and so far it has greater experience of taking and reading mammograms at a woman's first screen than at subsequent screens. In addition, since August 1995 all breast screening units have been required to take two mammographic views of the breast at a woman's first screen. Both these factors are likely to underlie the higher standardised detection ration for the first round of screening relative to subsequent rounds.

NHS Heating Fuel

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of expenditure on heating fuel in the NHS for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [37839]

Mr. Milburn: The Department's National Health Service Estates agency collects information on fuels used for energy in the NHS. This includes gas, oil, coal and electricity used to provide NHS trusts total energy requirement for lighting, heating and ventilation, power etc. Information is not collected separately on heating fuel.

The estimated cost of energy for NHS trusts in England for 1997–98 is £190,220,554. For 1998–99 it is £184,042,841.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the community hospitals which are currently the subject of a consultation process with a view to their closure. [37849]

Mr. Milburn: It is difficult to define comprehensively what is meant by "community" or "cottage" hospital. They differ from place to place in the scale, range and volume of services they offer. What characterises nearly all is that they provide a local service and admit patients under the care of a general practitioner.

The following community hospitals are currently the subject of a consultation process:

Anglia & Oxford

Burford and Wallingford/Watlington Community Hospital, Oxfordshire

Bartlett Hospital, Felixstowe

North Western

North Thames

William Julian Courtauld Hospital (part of Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust)[1]

Abortion

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many medical students undertaking training in obstetrics and gynaecology have refused to be involved in abortion procedures on grounds of conscience in each year since 1990; [37800]

(2) how many general practitioners have refused to be involved in referrals for abortion on grounds of conscience in each year since 1990; [37801]

(3) how many consultants in obstetrics and gynaecology have refused to take part in abortion procedures on grounds of conscience in each year since 1990. [37799]

Ms Jowell: This information is not collected centrally. We have no reason to believe that the current arrangements for conscientious objections are not in general working well. We have received very few complaints about the operation of the conscience clause, which indicates that the issue is being dealt with sensitively and sensibly.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions general practitioners with a conscientious objection must take to fulfil their duty of care when a patient requests referral for abortion. [37802]

Ms Jowell: In 1991 the General Medical Services Council of the British Medical Association issued guidance to general practitioners through local medical committees, reminding them of their obligations under their terms of service. This guidance remains extant and general practitioners who have a conscientious objection to abortion should refer the patient to another doctor as soon as possible.

Children

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend guidance under the Children Act 1989 on care plans and reviews applied to children placed in respite care services, with particular reference to disabled children; and what recent research on such issues his Department has evaluated. [37673]

Mr. Boateng: The Children Act and guidance set out local authorities' responsibilities in respect of drawing up care plans for, and reviewing the care of looked after children, including disabled children. In August 1995 the Department announced easements to the Arrangements for Placement of Children (General) Regulations 1991 which govern a series of short-term respite care placements. The easements address the frequency of reviews, the timing of the first visit, and the number of placement days allowed in any 12 month period.

The safeguards review of children living away from home stresses the importance of care planning and review and emphasises the particular vulnerability of disabled children. The Government have established a Ministerial Task Force to consider issues raised by the report and will take account of current research on related areas.

The Department has received the following research studies relevant to care plans and reviews for disabled children:

Robinson, C., Weston C. and Minkes J. (1995) Making progress: change and development in services to disabled children under the Children Act 1989, Bristol, Nora Fry Research Centre;

Grimshaw, R. and Sinclair, R. (1997) Planning to Care: Regulation, procedures and practice under the Children Act 1989, London, National Children's Bureau;

Morris, J. (1998) Still Missing?, London, Who Cares? Trust.

New Variant CJD

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if all the victims of nv-CJD have the same genetic change in the prion protein. [37871]

Ms Jowell: In all cases of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (nvCJD) where a genetic analysis has been carried out, the prion protein gene has the same genetic make-up. The significance of the genetic make-up in relation to susceptibility to disease, to the length of incubation period or to the changes seen in the brain on histopathological examination is not yet known.

All nvCJD cases tested share the same protein-subtype. It is not known whether this is related to the genetic make-up of the person affected. It may be related to the strain of the infectious agent.

Northumbria Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of the new appointees to the Northumbria Healthcare NHS Trust, giving their (a) political affiliation and (b) remuneration. [38099]

Mr. Milburn: The names of the chairman and non-executive appointees to the Northumbria Healthcare National Health Service Trust will be announced shortly.

Non-executive directors of NHS trusts and health authorities are entitled to remuneration of £5,000 a year. The chairman of Northumbria Healthcare NHS Trust is entitled to £19,245 a year.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who were the members of the Northumbria NHS Trust Project Board when it chose the name which it is proposed should be used by the new trust. [38315]

Mr. Milburn: The Northumbria National Health Service Trust Project Board comprised the chairmen, chief executives and medical directors of the three merging trusts: Cheviot and Wansbeck NHS Trust, North Tyneside Healthcare NHS Trust and Northumberland Community Health NHS Trust.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the system of hospital consultants' merit bonus awards; and if he will make a statement. [38089]

Mr. Milburn: I met the chairman and medical director of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards (ACDA) on 2 April. We had a constructive and wide ranging discussion regarding the Government's concerns about imbalances in the distribution of awards and other aspects of the existing scheme. I welcomed the action that had been taken to date to address these imbalances and ACDA's commitment to continued action in this area. We discussed what more could be done to address the Government's concerns. The chairman and medical director agreed to submit their detailed proposals on further action to ensure fairness, greater transparency of process, and better recognition of the achievement of service goals. I also asked the chairman and medical director to consider whether any changes in the size and composition of ACDA might be necessary to make it more effective, and to discuss this with the Academy of Royal Colleges in the first instance. We will consult fully with representatives of the professions and other relevant interests before any decisions on changes to the existing scheme are taken, with a view to implementing any such changes in the 1999 awards round.

Cholesterol (Treatment)

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), of 23 March 1998, Official Report, columns 49–50, on cholesterol treatment, what estimate he has made of the additional cost of general practitioners following the instructions contained in the executive letter on lipid-limiting drugs and the health care bulletin. [36792]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The overall expenditure on the statins group of drugs by general practitioners in 1997 was £115 million, compared with £20 million in 1993. It is currently rising at the rate of approximately £3 million each quarter. Expenditure on all lipid-lowering drugs totalled some £136 million in 1997.

The Executive Letter, accompanying statement and table gave advice, inter alia, on the use of the statin group of drugs in people with, or at high risk of developing, symptoms of coronary heart disease. Estimates of the additional general practitioner prescribing costs resulting directly from the issue of the Executive Letter are not available as it is difficult to differentiate between these and increased costs which would have been incurred anyway as more trial results became available and were published in the professional press.

However, the best information available suggests that the total cost could reach £240 million by 2002. This estimate depends on the degree of patient compliance, as well as on the particular product which is prescribed and the dosage. It also depends on the outcome of further trials currently in progress which may affect the applications for which these drugs may be used. This figure excludes lipid-lowering drugs prescribed by doctors other than general practitioners.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

16. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish his revised proposals for an EU code of conduct on arms sales. [36548]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are engaged in negotiations with EU partners on a draft text. Holding these discussions in public would not improve our chances of reaching agreement on an effective Code. We will of course publish the Code once it has been adopted.

Ethical Foreign Policy

17. Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what systems of measurement he has introduced against which to assess the implementation of his ethical foreign policy. [36549]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our commitment to an ethical foreign policy is clear from the many things we have already achieved. The best system of measurement comes from transparency and accountability. We have therefore committed our performance to the scrutiny of public, Parliament and NGOs with an Annual Report on Human Rights.

23. Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part the Government's ethical foreign policy has played in the Strategic Defence Review. [36556]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As the Government made clear in their manifesto, the Strategic Defence Review is foreign policy led. The FCO Mission Statement made it clear that the security of the United Kingdom and its Dependent Territories was a principal benefit which the Government would pursue through their foreign policy and that an ethical content was a key part of that policy.

Syria

18. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Syria. [36550]

Mr. Robin Cook: I had useful discussions on regional issues with President Asad and Foreign Minister Shara'a. We agreed on the need for movement on all tracks of the Middle East Peace Process.

Iraq

20. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to meet his United States counterparts to discuss matters relating to the Basra enclave. [36553]

Mr. Fatchett: We keep in constant touch with all Security Council Members, including the United States, about the implementation of Security Council Resolutions.

Exports

21. Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote British exports. [36554]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Conwy (Mrs. Williams).

Indonesia

22. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK relations with Indonesia. [36555]

Mr. Fatchett: We have a bilateral relationship with Indonesia which enables us to discuss a range of economic and political issues.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received regarding the situations of Pius Lustrilanang and Desmond J. Mahesa in Indonesia. [37503]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received a letter from the Indonesian Human Rights Campaign (TAPOL) and three notes from Amnesty International about Pius Lustrilanang and Desmond J. Mahesa.

Common Foreign and Security Policy

24. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what goals remain to be attained in the area of the EU CFSP under the British presidency. [36557]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Making the Common Foreign and Security Policy more effective and operational remains a key Presidency objective. Under our Presidency lead, the EU has responded rapidly to crises, including in Algeria and Kosovo; has agreed balanced policies on China and Iran; and raised the EU's profile and input into the Middle East Peace Process. Important outstanding goals include agreement to an EU Code of Conduct on arms exports.

Middle East

25. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the EU has contributed to support the middle east peace process since 1993. [36558]

Mr. Fatchett: The EU has contributed £464 million (700.95 million ecu) to support the Middle East Peace Process since 1993. In addition, Member States have also contributed a substantial amount of bilateral aid.

Under the UK Presidency, the EU has agreed to extend the current aid package when it expires at the end of 1998.

29. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for progress in the peace process in the middle east. [36562]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Hanson).

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on recent efforts to promote the peace process in the middle east. [36567]

Mr. Fatchett: During my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's visit to the Middle East on 15–18 March, he met with the key players in the region. These included President Mubarak and Foreign Minister Moussa of Egypt, PM Netanyahu and Defence Minister Mordechai of Israel, Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan, PM Hariri and Foreign Minister Bouaz of Lebanon, President Assad and Foreign Minister Shara of Syria and President Arafat of the Palestinian Authority. He discussed with them ideas for ways in which the EU can play a more prominent role in reinvigorating the Middle East Peace Process.

Since his return, he has met a number of interested parties, including the Israeli Ambassador to London and the President of the Board of Deputies of British Jews. We look forward to the Prime Minister's visit later this month.

Kosovo

26. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the situation in Kosovo. [36559]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are deeply concerned by the potential for further violence in Kosovo. The use of excessive force by the Serbian police in recent weeks against Kosovar Albanians will have widened support for the terrorists. We call on President Milosevic to act quickly to launch the meaningful dialogue necessary to strengthen the hands of moderates on both sides.

27. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of Albania and Macedonia about the situation in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [36560]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary chaired a meeting in Bonn on 25 March of Contact Group, EU Troika and regional countries including Albania and Macedonia, at which the situation in Kosovo was discussed. My right hon. Friend also had a separate bilateral meeting on this occasion with Prime Minister Nano. We remain in close touch with Albania and Macedonia.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take to protect the Albanian community in Kosovo. [38182]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom has played a leading role in the concerted international response to the violence in Kosovo in recent weeks. We shall continue to work with our international partners to underline that repression in Kosovo will not be tolerated and to encourage meaningful dialogue without preconditions on the future status of the province.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the consequences of the decision of the Contact Group to postpone the implementation of the recommendations set out in its statement of 9 March; and if he will make a statement. [38183]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Members of the Contact Group have already implemented measures against Belgrade in accordance with their agreement in London on 9 March. In addition the European Union decided on 19 March to continue its arms embargo against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), not to supply repressive equipment, to introduce a visa ban against certain named individuals and to apply a moratorium on export credits to Serbia. The United Nations Security Council adopted a comprehensive arms embargo against the FRY on 31 March.

Contact Group Ministers meeting in Bonn on 25 March urged Belgrade to engage in a meaningful dialogue without preconditions with the Kosovar Albanian leadership. They agreed that the Contact Group would meet again after four weeks to review progress and consider the need for additional measures.

Common Agricultural Policy

28. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make reform of the CAP his priority for the Heads of Government meeting in Cardiff in June. [36561]

Mr. Doug Henderson: CAP reform is a major priority for the Government, and we will continue to work hard to achieve radical reform. Now that the Commission has tabled draft regulations, the UK Presidency will seek to make as much progress as possible before Cardiff.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the UN Revolving Credit Fund, proposed by the Secretary General of the United Nations, as part of his UN reform proposals. [33302]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 11 March 1998]: A Revolving Credit Fund could help to ease the UN's severe cashflow problems, and the Government will consider the idea carefully. But a long term solution requires that all member states pay their contributions promptly and in full.

EU Funds

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those European Communities budget lines from which funding may be applied for in respect of information projects in the United Kingdom relating to (a) Economic and Monetary Union and (b) the European Communities. [36956]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Title B3–3 of the Community Budget covers information and communication. The Commission also makes grants to certain European organisations under Chapter A-30 of the budget, which may include support for information activities.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what grants, pursuant to European Communities budget lines A-3024 and A-3104, are available for Projects Organised By Associations and Federations of European Interest operating in the United Kingdom; which bodies received awards in the last financial year; what activities are intended for targeted support under the category Reflection at European Level on the Ethical and Spiritual Foundations of European Integration; what part his Department plays in the awards; and if he will make a statement. [36948]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In 1998 a total of 1.35 mecu is available under Community budget lines A-3024 and A-3104 for projects organised by federations of European interest. This budget is not broken down by Member State. Criteria and decisions on awarding grants are a matter for the Commission.

Mr. Doug Henderson: In 1998 a total of 1.1 mecu is available under the Community budget lines A-3029 and A-3109 to support international non-governmental youth organisations. This budget is specifically for international

[36970]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In 1998 a total of 250,000 ecu is available under Community budget lines A-3025 and A-3105 to support Journalists in Europe. This organisation runs an annual training programme for young journalists from around the world, focusing on the EU and on political, economic and social developments in Europe. My Department has no role in determining the activities of this organisation and we have no information about which UK journalists have taken part.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the purpose of projects undertaken under European Communities budget line B3–302, Information Programmes for Non-Member Programmes; what are the target audiences; which countries are concerned; and what input his Department provides. [36965]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Projects under Community budget line B3–302 are intended to inform people outside of the EU about the Union's work and to promote understanding of the EU's role, in particular, as a provider of aid and as a trading partner. Information activity is not limited to any particular countries, but there is a focus on states which have association agreements with the EU. Programmes under this budget line are run by the Commission.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what grants, pursuant to European Communities budget lines A-3021 and A-3101, are available to Organisations Advancing the Idea of Europe operating in the United Kingdom; which bodies received awards in the last financial year; and what criteria are used by his Department in awarding grants. [36974]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In 1998 a total of 2 mecu is available under Community budget lines A-3021 and A-3101 to support organisations advancing the idea of Europe. This budget is not broken down by Member State. Criteria and decisions on awarding grants are a matter for the Commission.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the information outlets in receipt of funds in the United Kingdom for 1997 under European Communities title B3–301 for 1997; what role his Department plays in the supply of information to such outlets; and if he will make a statement on the purpose of the International Federation of Europe Houses. [36961]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following information outlets in the UK receive funding from Community budget line B3--301. European Document centres in university libraries (45); European Information Centres providing business intelligence on operating in the EU (21); rural carrefours providing information for the rural community (6). The information held in these various centres generally includes UK Government publications, as well as EU documents and academic and commercial literature and databases.

The International Federation of Europe Houses is an umbrella grouping of Europe Houses, which provide a one-stop-shop for information about the EU in some countries.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects in receipt of funds in the United Kingdom for 1997 under title B3–300, General Information and Communication Work Concerning the European Union; and if he will make a statement on the part his Department plays in the determination of such. [36940]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Youth Forum is an umbrella grouping of national youth organisations. It lobbies on EU issues affecting young people and organises various conferences and events. My Department has no role in determining the Forum's activities.

Prince Programme

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the redirection of the Prince Programme after ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam. [36955]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The PRINCE programme currently provides for information activities on citizens rights under the single market, on the single currency and on the future shape of the European Union—"Building Europe Together". Building Europe Together is currently focused on the Amsterdam Treaty, but it also covers information on the future enlargement of the EU. The existence and priorities of PRINCE are reviewed every year under the annual budgetary procedure.

EU Information Projects

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money is available from European Union budget lines for information projects on the European Union in applicant countries; and if he will deposit in the Library a list of those projects in operation. [37559]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Essen European Council of December 1994 agreed on the "need among member states of the EU and the associated countries to have a better knowledge of each others' societies. Therefore expansion and deepening of information efforts are necessary."

Much of this work forms an integral part of the European Union's technical assistance programme for Central Europe (Phare).

In addition to these integrated activities, there is also a specific programme for 1998 of 6.6 mecu for an information strategy among the applicant countries. This is designed to stimulate greater interest and understanding of EU affairs among the general public in these countries.

European Commission

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the (i) role and (ii) current budget of a European commissioner's cabinet; what guidelines exist as to its composition and function; and if he will list the special advisers currently working in the Commission. [37770]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member in due course. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

European Voluntary Service (Mr. Hans Koschnick)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of Mr. Hans Koschnick, as a special adviser to the European Commission in connection with the European Voluntary Service. [37932]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My answer to the hon. Member of 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 457, based on information from the European Commission, recorded that Mr. Hans Koschnick was not employed by them. However, I now understand from the European Commission that, although Mr. Koschnick is not their permanent employee, he has been working under contract as an adviser to DG XXII (Education, Training, Youth) with activities in the field of the European Voluntary Service.

We understand that his remit includes developing voluntary service projects and establishing links between voluntary service organisations in different Member States.

We recommend that the hon. Member ask the European Commission if he requires further details of Mr. Koschnick's role.

Turkey

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish Government; and if he will make a statement. [36533]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. McCabe).

WALES

Social Service and Health Departments (Co-operation)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the quality of co-operation between social service departments and health authorities; and if he will make a statement. [36459]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Evidence available to the Welsh Office suggests that following Local Government re-organisation good progress is being made in establishing effective joint working between Social Service Departments and Health Authorities.

I attach the greatest importance to good joint working and, indeed, discussed this with representatives of the Welsh Local Government Association on 16 March. My officials are working closely with colleagues in other Health Departments on initiatives to tackle this UK-wide issue and are also taking forward action with authorities in Wales.

The Welsh Office is funding a project through the North Wales Health Authority to identify good practice in collaborative working with social services departments. The report of this work will be made available for wider dissemination. In October 1997 I announced an additional £9.548 million to tackle the pressures of emergency hospital admissions and to reduce delays in discharging patients. The management of these additional resources has meant that health authorities and social services have needed to work more closely together to address local priorities and improve joint planning and co-ordination of service delivery.

In the light of the Audit Commission report "Coming of Age" the Welsh Office has recently issued advice to health and local authorities, seeking better collaboration at a local level to improve the quality and range of services provided for vulnerable and older people. This will be followed up by meetings with joint Health and Local Authority teams on the progress being made in implementing the report's recommendations.

I expect authorities to work towards effective joint planning arrangements which will include improvement in multi-disciplinary assessment procedures and the development of health and social care services to enable vulnerable people to optimise their independence through timely recuperation and rehabilitation opportunities.

Out-of-town Developments

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce an automatic rate review for town centre shops whose trade is affected by out of town developments. [37024]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Ratepayers have the right to make a proposal to the valuation officer to alter the rateable value of their property if there has been a material change in circumstances which they believe affects the value of the property. Local authorities can also make proposals to take account of changes they believe to affect property values.

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many out-of-town supermarkets have been given planning permission in Wales since 1 May 1997. [37031]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not held centrally. However, during the period 1 May 1997 to 1 March 1998 my right hon. Friend received details of 18 retail applications comprising 9 calls in requests, 2 departure references, and 7 shopping direction referrals. Of these 1 case was called in for the Secretary of State's own determination.

Children in Care

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints have been registered by children in care regarding the way that they are treated, in the last three years. [37056]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on the number of complaints prior to local government reorganisation is not available. However, we are aware of 55 complaints since 1 April 1996. A breakdown is as follows:

Substance Misuse

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives are being pursued to educate young people in Wales about substance misuse. [37370]

Mr. Win Griffiths: "Forward Together", a five-year strategy to combat drug and alcohol misuse in Wales, has been in place since 1996. A Welsh Advisory Committee on Drug and Alcohol Misuse advises the Secretary of State on the implementation of the strategy. The Welsh Drug and Alcohol Unit, on contract to the Welsh Office, assists in the implementation of the strategy. The Unit provides practical and administrative support to those involved in combating drug and alcohol misuse.

Within the framework of "Forward Together", a Strategic Prevention Action Plan (SPAP) has been developed and widely disseminated in Wales. The SPAP will raise awareness and increase the level of preventive action for the population as a whole as well as targeting specific groups such as parents, young people and children. All schools, drug and alcohol agencies and other relevant organisations have been encouraged to work to support the Plan.

As part of the overall strategy several free bilingual resources are being distributed to those working in the field of prevention with young people. These include "50/50"—a bilingual magazine designed for young people and their parents; "The A Files"—a CD size alcohol leaflet for young people; and "Let's Talk"—a series of collectable postcards with a complimentary poster for young people.

The Department has issued circular guidance to Schools, "Drug Misuse: Prevention and Schools" (Ref 54/95). In partnership with health and social services, police and the community, schools have a responsibility to consider their response to drug misuse through appropriate education, including the teaching of certain aspects as part of National Curriculum, and through appropriate management of incidents on school premises. In support of this work, the circular guidance advocates that each school should have a drug prevention policy, to ensure that young people know and understand the risks of drug taking and alcohol misuse and have the knowledge and skills to resist.

Hospital Services (Porthmadog)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the health care implications for people in the Porthmadog area of the provision at Bangor of accident and emergency services for them. [37677]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None. The planning of healthcare for people in North Wales is a management issue for the North Wales Health Authority and its provider units.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he estimates construction of the community hospital at Porthmadog will (a) begin and (b) be completed. [37598]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No progress can be made on this scheme until the North Wales Health Authority has considered the outcome of its review of community hospital provision.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in respect of the construction of the new community hospital in Porthmadog. [37602]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Since 1 May 1997 we have received 12 letters on the subject and I have met with the right hon. Member and the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd).

Welsh Language Courses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce the drop-out rate among adults on Welsh language courses. [37600]

Mr. Ron Davies: Welsh language provision is an integral part of my proposals for lifelong learning in Wales as set out in the Green Paper "Learning is for Everyone" which I published on 2 April. Individual further education institutions are responsible for monitoring student retention/completion rates on Welsh for Adults courses and for taking any necessary action. Student retention/completion will continue to be monitored in the context of all quality assessments, and during 1998 a specific study will be undertaken by OHMCI on behalf of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new community hospitals have been built in Wales since 1992; and if he will list them. [37675]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Six community hospitals have been built since 1992. They are:

Barry Neighbourhood—The Vale of Glamorgan

Cefni—Llangefni, Isle of Anglesey

Deeside—Flintshire

Ebbw Vale—Blaenau Gwent

Torfaen—Pontypool

Penrhos Stanley—Holyhead, Isle of Anglesey.

Blood Donation Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to encourage blood donation in Wales. [37601]

Mr. Win Griffiths: It is the responsibility of the blood transfusion services to recruit blood donors. However, the Welsh Office has assisted the Welsh Blood Service in the production of publicity material and previously taken part in national publicity campaigns.

Water Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times he has met representatives of water authorities; and if he will make a statement. [38130]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Both my right hon. Friend and I have met representatives of the water industry in Wales on several occasions and will continue to do so as appropriate.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the new National Health Service trusts to begin their work; and if he will make a statement. [38290]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Project teams have been established to support local consultation on the proposals which I announced on 30 March. These teams will also do whatever is necessary to make contingent planning arrangements for the establishment of the new trusts. Subject to the outcome of consultation and detailed consideration, my right hon. Friend expects to announce his final decisions in the autumn. Board level appointments procedures and detailed planning will then commence to enable trusts to become operational on 1 April 1999.

Badgers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what records are maintained of the number of non-target species caught in snares set for badgers under his Department's tuberculosis control scheme. [38056]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The tuberculosis control policy for Great Britain is operated by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister responsible for food safety, my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), on 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 406.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost of the proposed badger culling experiment broken down to show each constituent element for (a) 1998 and (b) each subsequent year of the proposed experiment. [38055]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister responsible for food safety, my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), on 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 406.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many badgers were trapped under his Department's tuberculosis control scheme in each year since 1985 by (a) snares and (b) cage traps; and if he will indicate the number of animals which suffered injuries in (a) and (b). [38057]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The day to day operational control for bovine tuberculosis is undertaken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister responsible for food safety, my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 503.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department has spent on developing vaccines to prevent bovine tuberculosis since 1985; and how much investment is planned for each of the next five years. [38054]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None. In the UK funding for the development of vaccines to prevent bovine tuberculosis in animals is provided by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister responsible for food safety, my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), on 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 502.

Hospital Beds

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by hospital the number of beds (a) made available since 1 May 1997 and (b) removed between 1 January 1992 and 1 May 1997. [38069]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Abattoirs

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on financial support to small scale abattoirs in rural Wales. [38077]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The provision of grant aid to abattoirs is prohibited by EC State Aid restrictions except under certain specific conditions, including the abandonment of 125 per cent. of existing capacity in the same region. This effectively means that it is very difficult for the Government to provide financial support to small scale abattoirs in rural areas.

Officials (Regional Knowledge)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to encourage Welsh Office officials (a) to visit and (b) to acquire further knowledge of the regions of Wales. [38079]

Mr. Ron Davies: Many of my officials visit various parts of Wales in the course of their duties and are encouraged to do so. Staff are based not only in Cardiff but in Llandrindod Wells, Carmarthen, Caernarfon, Colwyn Bay and Aberystwyth.

Awareness of Wales and Welsh issues will form an increasingly important part of the Welsh Office Training and Development Programme.

Agricultural Subsidies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce measures to offset the reduction in payments in agricultural subsidies due to the increase in the value of the green pound. [37880]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The rules for agrimonetary compensation apply across the European Community and separate arrangements could not be introduced in Wales.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he is going to consult about possible changes to the local government capital finance arrangements in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [38436]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Copies of a consultation paper on local authority capital have been placed in the Library of the House today. This is the third consultation paper in the series "Modernising Local Government in Wales". Consultation papers on other aspects of the local government finance system and the new ethical framework will follow soon.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health authorities have an osteoporosis strategy in place; and if he will list them. [37308]

Mr. Win Griffiths [pursuant to his reply, 6 April 1998, c. 104]: I regret that the following paragraph was inadvertently omitted from the answer, and should have read:

Typically these are based on the Barlow Report 1994 which contained wide ranging recommendations on such key issues as prevention, scanning, hormone replacement therapy and improved co-operation between the professionals delivering the service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Timms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 31 March; and if he will make a statement. [37595]

Dr. John Cunningham: I chaired the fourth meeting under the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Union Council of Agriculture Ministers on 31 March in Brussels. My noble Friend the Lord Donoughue, Parliamentary Secretary responsible for the farming and food industry, represented the United Kingdom. The Under-Secretary of State for Wales, my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths), was also present.

I convened the Council expressly to consider the Commission's proposals, published on 18 March, for changes to the EU Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) in the framework of Agenda 2000. The Council debate on this vital issue was held in open session, and was thus available in full to the media and to other interested parties. There was also an important political dimension to the debate: reforming the CAP in tandem with changes to the EU's future financing provisions and to its regional and structural policies are essential steps to prepare for further enlargement of the European Union. It is significant that the formal opening of the enlargement negotiations with six applicant countries took place in Brussels on the same day.

A wide range of views on the Commission's CAP reform proposals was expressed in the Council. No Minister denied that there was a need for reform to take place, or that the process should begin forthwith. I was able to conclude that the UK Presidency would now begin an intensive programme of technical examination of the Commission's proposals, leading to a further discussion in the Agriculture Council in late May.

I was also able to establish, as President of the Council, that there was unanimous agreement amongst Member States to defer until 1 January 1999 implementation of last July's Commission Decision on Specified Risk Materials. During this period measures taken by Member States on a national basis to protect the health of their populations will be maintained.

Over-thirty-months Scheme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the latest figures for (a) the number of cattle slaughtered under the over 30-months-scheme, (b) the amount of brown granular dust produced by the rendering of those cattle, (c) the number of carcases incinerated without rendering and (d) the amount of meat and bone meal awaiting incineration at the latest available date. [37571]

Mr. Rooker: Up to 29 March 1998, just under 2.2 million animals had been slaughtered under the Over-Thirty-Month Scheme (OTMS), of which some 128,000 were directly incinerated. The majority of cattle presented for the scheme are being rendered to produce two products, meat and bone meal (MBM) and tallow, which are being safely and securely stored pending destruction. To date, some 325,000 tonnes of MBM has been produced as a consequence of the rendering of OTMS animals, of which some 314,000 tonnes is currently in store, the remainder having been incinerated.

Organophosphates

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commenced and (b) evaluated on the number of farmers who have contracted illness as a result of exposure to organophosphate pesticides. [38230]

Mr. Rooker: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) Pesticide Incidents Appraisal Panel (PIAP) considers all investigated incidents where the use of a pesticide (controlled under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986) may have affected the health of the user or a member of the public nearby. The Panel is chaired by a doctor, its members being drawn from the HSE, the Department of Health, and the National Poisons Information Service.

PIAP assesses all information from investigations by HSE and local authorities, with any additional material from the National Health Service or others involved. The incidents are classified according to the likelihood of the ill-health being linked to the pesticide exposure and an annual report is published.

The Suspected Adverse Reaction Surveillance Scheme (SARSS) is a voluntary reporting scheme for monitoring animal and human suspected adverse reactions (SARs) to all veterinary medicinal products. Farmers, doctors, veterinary surgeons and members of the public are encouraged to report any SAR involving a veterinary medicine to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD). Marketing authorisation holders are required to send reports of SARs to the VMD. Human SARs are considered by the Appraisal Panel for Human Suspected Adverse Reactions to Veterinary Medicines and reported to the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC). The reports of the Appraisal Panel are published and copies are available in the Library of the House.

Bilderberg Group

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the influence of the Bilderberg group on world agricultural prices. [37924]

Mr. Rooker: No such representations have been received.

Canadian Pedigree Friesians

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his policy to allow meat from Canadian pedigree friesians into the United Kingdom food chain. [38065]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Provided the meat originates from approved establishments in Canada, is accompanied by the necessary official certification and is not rejected following completion of veterinary checks at a border inspection post, meat from Canadian pedigree fresians, and other bovine animals, will be allowed to enter the European Community. The sale of beef for human consumption from animals originating in Canada which are over 30 months old at the time of slaughter is, however, prohibited by the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich the proportion of Central Science Laboratory work and income generated in 1997–98 from (a) research and development, (b) policy advice and surveillance and (c) technical support. [37946]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I am however able to provide the following analysis:

£ million

	CSL York	CSL Norwich	Total
MAFF R&D	9.8	2.6	12.4
Other MAFF	7.0	2.4	9.4
Commercial	2.4	1.4	3.8

These figures are subject to financial year end reconciliation.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 504, what assumptions his Department has made of the redundancy costs for staff in non-mobile grades currently employed by the Central Science Laboratory in Norwich, if the Norwich laboratory were to be closed. [37987]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: In the previous relocation exercise, to initially occupy the Sand Hutton site, the Central Science Laboratory was successful in the redeployment of non-mobile staff at the various sites vacated. In the event of a decision to relocate the work undertaken at the Norwich laboratory to York every effort will be made to redeploy those non-mobile staff not relocating and it is not anticipated that there would be significant compulsory redundancies.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average cost of redundancy of a Central Science Laboratory, Norwich employee in a non-mobile grade; and by whom that cost will be borne. [37952]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: In the previous relocation exercise, to initially occupy the Sand Hutton site, the Central Science Laboratory was successful in assisting non-mobile staff to secure employment elsewhere. On this basis it is not envisaged that there would be significant compulsory redundancies should the decision be made to relocate the work undertaken at the Norwich laboratory to York. However, the average cost of redundancy for a non-mobile employee based at CSL Norwich would be £5,500 and such costs would be borne by the Department.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 597, if he will list for the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich the total office and laboratory floor area which his Department considers not capable of practical use. [37984]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The total area of a building is usually assessed as the "Gross Internal Area". The usable space within a building is normally assessed as the "Net Internal Area". The former is a measurement of each floor plate whereas the latter is a measurement which excludes such areas as plant rooms, toilets, stairwells, corridors, internal structural walls and columns, and some other related service facilities.

The estimated Gross Internal Area of laboratories and offices at the Central Science Laboratory in York is 26,500 square metres. The estimated Net Internal Area is 18,400 square metres. The usable space figure of 15,600 square metres given in my answer of 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 597, was the estimated Net Internal Area of laboratories and offices less some 2,800 square metres of additional very specialist facilities.

An estimate of the Gross Internal Area of laboratories and offices at Colney Lane, Norwich is not available and obtaining one would involve disproportionate cost. However, the estimated Gross Internal Area for the whole Colney Lane site is 5,000 square metres. The figure of 2,200 square metres given in my answer of 3 March was the estimated Net Internal Area of laboratories and offices.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons his Department did not accept the view of the Prior Options Review, and the study by independent consultants, as set out by his Department on 9 December 1996, that consolidation of the Central Science Laboratory in York was likely to lead to (a) a breaking of beneficial scientific links with the Institute of Food Research and (b) a loss of business previously based at Central Science Laboratory, Norwich. [37945]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The Central Science Laboratory collaborates with institutes and universities in this country and within the EU. This demonstrates that geographical proximity is not a necessary requirement for productive collaboration.

Previous experience has shown that the impact on income from MAFF customers, the wider public sector and the private sector, as a result of relocation, is minimal in the short term. In the longer term benefits have been realised from an increase in the customer base.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the net cash allocation initially agreed by his Department for the Central Science Laboratory for 1997–98 together with the final outcome cash allocation. [37941]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The net cash allocation originally agreed for 1997–98 for the Central Science Laboratory was £1.526m. This figure is subject to amendment throughout the year with approval from the MAFF Management Board. Financial year end reconciliation is presently in progress and the final outcome is not yet available.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) current and (b) anticipated private sector tenants of the Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York, together with the annual rent payable. [37947]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: There are no current leases but a lease is presently being negotiated with the Centre for Biomedical Accelerator Mass Spectrometry for occupation of a small part of the Sand Hutton site. There are no immediate plans to lease accommodation to other private sector tenants.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 728, what estimates he has made of the average downtime for scientific staff relocated from Norwich to York, including time spent decommissioning, moving and recommissioning equipment. [38151]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: I have no reason to believe that the estimated down time would differ significantly from previous experience detailed in the answer to which my hon. Friend refers. The earlier major relocation to the new Central Science Laboratory site near York included the relocation of sophisticated analytical chemistry equipment similar to that at Norwich. The average down time for that relocation exercise was three weeks for each scientific team.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff, and how many scientists, were employed by the Central Science Laboratory at Torry, Aberdeen, in January 1995. [37767]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: A total of 108 staff were employed by the Central Science Laboratory at Torry in January 1995. Of these, 67 were scientists.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 188, on the Central Science Laboratory, how many non fee-earning scientists are employed by the Central Science Laboratory at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich. [37827]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: There are 28 non fee-earning scientists employed at the CSL York laboratory and 2 at the Norwich laboratory. These staff are employed in management roles and support functions.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 April 1998, Official Report, column 656, if he will set out the reasons for his Department's commitment of £170,000 of research resources to the York Laboratory of the CSL in 1998–99; and for the absence of any commitment for similar research to (a) York in 1997–98 and (b) Norwich in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99. [38382]

Mr. Rooker: £170,000 was committed to CSL York as an interim arrangement following the relocation of the Microbiology Group from the Torry Research Station, Aberdeen. The purpose was to ensure continuing expertise at CSL York, delivering work of value to the Ministry, whilst CSL York secured additional sources of external funding. No such commitment was sought by York in 1997–98, or Norwich in 1997–98 and 1998–99.

Food Science Research

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the food science research contracts allocated by his Department in 1997–98, broken down by length of contract, value of contract and institution securing the contract. [37965]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The very extensive list of the food science research contracts allocated by the Department in 1997–98, broken down by length of contract, value of contract and institution securing the contract, has been placed in the Library of the House.

BSE (Compensation)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 499, what was the total amount of compensation paid in relation to BSE in the last five financial years; and if he will provide a breakdown of compensation payments by each sector of the food industry. [37681]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The information requested is as follows:

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reasons advanced by the UK's EU partners for the maintenance of intervention in discussions on the Common Agricultural Policy. [37594]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: In discussions on the original Agenda 2000 proposals, the Agriculture Council agreed in November last year that maintaining the status quo in the CAP could lead to an increase in intervention stocks. In view of this, the Council called upon the European Commission to frame formal legislative proposals which would, amongst other things, reduce price-support measures. This would reduce the importance of intervention as a management tool, which is its main purpose.

The Commission's proposals for reform, which were presented to the Agriculture Council on 31 March, included cuts in the beef, cereal and dairy support prices and the abolition of intervention for the beef sector. While accepting the need for reduced price support, some Member States have argued that, without full compensation, some of these price reductions go too far.

Kali Mountford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations his Department has made to the European Commission concerning reform of the CAP and the structural funds. [36566]

Mr. Rooker: Proposals for the reform of the CAP were presented to the Agriculture Council by the European Commission on 31 March. The Government will progress discussion of these proposals as far as possible during the UK Presidency and will seek to negotiate an outcome which reflects UK priorities. The same applies to reform of the structural funds.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the reform of the Common Agricultural Policy; and if he will make a statement. [38313]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission presented its formal legislative proposals for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy to the Agriculture Council on 31 March. In most respects, these proposals go very much in the direction that the Government have advocated. The Government will progress discussion of these proposals as far as possible during the UK Presidency and will thereafter seek to negotiate an outcome which reflects UK priorities.

Pig Farming

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on the competitiveness of UK pig farming in Europe of the UK ban on farrowing crates. [37575]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 April 1998]: None, the use of farrowing crates is not banned in the UK. Sow stalls and tethers will be banned in the UK from 1 January 1999. While no assessment has been made of the impact of this ban, it does present the UK pig sector with marketing opportunities emphasising high welfare standards.

Sheep Dips

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department gives farmers on the disposal of sheep dip, with particular reference to that containing organophosphates. [38341]

Mr. Rooker: Advice is given in the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water and the "Sheep Dipping" leaflet, AS29, copies of both of which are in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which other EU countries dipping sheep for the treatment or prevention of scab is compulsory. [37844]

Mr. Rooker: The information available to the Department is that no other EU member state makes it compulsory to dip sheep for the prevention of scab. It is understood that some Member States require infested sheep to be treated but not necessarily by dipping.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when (a) Australia, (b) New Zealand and (c) the United States made the dipping of sheep for the prevention of scab compulsory. [37845]

Mr. Rooker: It is understood that there is no sheep scab in Australia, New Zealand or the United States and consequently no need for compulsory treatment, whether or not by dipping.

DEFENCE

US Visiting Forces

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the total number of US Visiting Forces based in the UK; and where they are located; [31917]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 490, how many of his Department's personnel are based at (i) Abbey Wood, (ii) RAF Alconbury, Molesworth and Upwood, (iii) RAF Bentley Priory, (iv) Boscombe Down, (v) RAF Bracknell, (vi) RAF Brampton, (vii) RAF Brize Norton, (viii) RAF Coltishall, (ix) RAF Cranwell, (x) RAF Croughton, (xi) RAF Digby, (xii) RAF Daws Hill, Hythe and West Ruislip, (xiii) Eastcote, (xiv) RAF Fairford, (xv) RAF Farnborough, (xvi) RAF Fylingdales, (xvii) RAF High Wycombe, (xviii) RAF Honnington, (xix) RAF Lakenheath and RAF Feltwell, (xx) RAF Leuchars, (xxi) Landwater, (xxii) RAF Lyneham, (xxiii) RAF Morham, (xxiv) RAF Menwith Hill, (xxv) RAF Mildenhall, (xxvi) RAF Oakhanger, (xxvii) RAF Spadeadam, (xxviii) RAF Uxbridge, (xxix) RAF Valley, (xxx) RAF Waddington, (xxxi) Waterbeach, (xxxii) RAF Wittering, (xxxiii) RAF Wyton, (xxxiv) Ipswich and (xxxv) London. [33574]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1998, c. 490]: I regret to inform the hon. Gentleman that the information provided was incorrect. Accurate data are as follows: There are in the region of 13,500 members of the United States Visiting Force permanently based at some 30 locations in the UK. Precise information on personnel assignments is not held centrally. However, on the basis of the data that are available, total numbers of United States Service and civilian personnel as at 20 March are listed against the sites where they are located, together with details of MoD personnel located at the same sites.

Location	US personnel	MoD personnel
RAF Alconbury/Molesworth/Upwood	1,012	308
RAF Croughton/Barford St John	443	203
RAF Daws Hill/West Ruislip/Eastcote/USN London	770	76
RAF Digby	38	970
RAF Fairford/Welford	214	249

In addition to the above, there are approximately 200 US service personnel present in the UK, mainly serving in singleton posts at a wide variety of locations who are either participating in UK/US exchange programmes or engaged in specific bilateral projects or operational posts.

Officer Training Corps

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the membership of the Officer Training Corps in each institution in which it operates; [13757]

(2) what percentage of members of the Officer Training Corps subsequently join the regular forces. [13756]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his replies, 5 November 1997, c. 254 and 24 November 1997, c. 394]: I regret to inform my hon. Friend that the figures for membership of the Officer Training Corps in Oxford and Cambridge were incorrect. They should be amended to read the following:

Officer Cadets:

Cambridge: 192.

The establishment figures remain unchanged at 224 for both institutions.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the cost to the armed forces of dealing with the millennium computer problem, including the embedded chip problem; how much has been spent to date; if he will break these figures down to distinguish between costs to (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement. [37994]

Mr. Spellar: The predicted cost to MOD of dealing with the Year 2000 date change problem is £200 million. This is the same figure as that reported in November 1997 and includes the cost of addressing the embedded chip problem. The cost estimate for the problems found so far is £150 million, but is expected to rise to £200 million as the remaining systems are assessed and rectification work on them costed.

Some £4.4 million has been expended to date. This reflects only the cost of work so far completed. It does not include expenditure which has been contractually committed but not yet paid.

The year 2000 cost figures are collected within MOD on a budget holder basis and not by Service. The costs provided include the total for all of MOD's budget areas.

RAF Fast Jet Aircrew

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (i) actual and (ii) peacetime establishment RAF fast jet aircrew are allocated to (a) Tornado GR, (b) Tornado F3, (c) Jaguar and (d) Harrier. [37934]

Dr. Reid: The information requested, as at 3 April 1998, is set out in the table:

Aircraft	Fast jet aircrew	Total aircrew[1]
Tornado GR1	Peacetime establishment	294
	Actual strength	274
Tornado F3	Peacetime establishment	265
	Actual strength	250

Uranium Shells

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how (1) how many depleted uranium shells have been fired at the MOD/DERA base at Dundrennan, Kirkcudbrightshire, in each of the years since such firing started; [37611]

(2) how many of the depleted uranium shells fired at the MOD/DERA base at Dundrennan, Kirkcudbrightshire, have subsequently been recovered. [37612]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Alasdair Morgan, dated 7 April 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency I have been asked to reply to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about depleted uranium shells at Kirkcudbrightshire.

The number of depleted uranium rounds fired at the Kirkcudbright range each year since the start of the CHARM programme are as follows:

Year	Number
1983	56
1984	179
1985	152
1986	118
1987	151
1988	272
1989	434
1990	795
1991	666
1992	781
1993	982
1994	472
1995	280
1996	147
1997	749
1998	12
Total	6,255

During this period four of the CHAKM penetrators fired have been recovered.

I hope this information is useful.

Low Flying Training

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 414, if the military exercises were carried out over the Sheffield area; what regulations govern (a) military and (b) other aircraft breaking the sound barrier; and if the sonic booms detected by Edinburgh University Seismology Unit above Sheffield, on 24 March 1997 were the result of aircraft breaking the sound barrier. [37991]

Mr. Spellar: It is not possible, twelve months after the date in question, to state precisely where military aircraft activity was being carried out. Records kept show only that aircraft were booked to carry out low flying over the Peak District between 2030 and 2107 hours local time on the evening of 24 March 1997. No low level flying is permitted over the Sheffield urban area, or any other major conurbation. Records of flying at medium level—between 2,000 and 24,000 feet—are not maintained so it is possible that there were aircraft in the area at medium level.

The regulations governing military aircraft flying at supersonic speeds are contained in the Joint Service Publication entitled 'Military Flying Regulations', an extract of which was provided in the answer I gave her on 1 April 1998, Official Report, columns 547–48. The regulations which apply to civil aviation are a matter for my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

As for the sonic event detected by the British Geological Survey at Edinburgh University, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave her on 30 March 1998, Official Report, columns 414–15.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of incapacity benefit are suffering from pneumoconiosis and emphysema in the areas covered by the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency offices. [37909]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Incapacity Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Cummings, dated 6 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question, asking how many claimants of Incapacity Benefit are suffering from pneumoconiosis and emphysema in the areas covered by the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency (BA) offices.

Information is not available in the format requested. As at 31 August 1997, there were approximately 20 people in receipt of Incapacity Benefit (IB) for emphysema in the area covered by the Peterlee office and none for pneumoconiosis. No customers were in receipt of IB for either condition in the area covered by the Seaham office.

Source DSS Analytical Services Division, based on a 5 per cent. sample of IB cases.

I hope that this is helpful.

Focus Groups

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the companies he has commissioned to undertake focus group research indicating the individual projects they are undertaking and the companies that tendered for each contract. [38218]

Mr. Field: The Department publishes a Research Yearbook which contains details of contracts awarded in the relevant financial year.

Organisations commissioned to undertake focus group research for the Department and the title of each contract are as follows:

Newchurch and Company—Child Support Agency customer and compliance research.

Market Opinion Research International—Attitudes towards welfare reform.

Market Opinion Research International—Attitudes to disability benefits.

British Market Research Bureau International—Attitudes towards housing benefits.

Institute for Employment Studies—People management in DSS Headquarters.

Social and Community Planning Research—On-going contract for qualitative research on welfare reform issues.

Social and Community Planning Research—Survey of women; development work.

Social and Community Planning Research—Preparation for Women's Juries.

Social and Community Planning Research—Work Incentives and Intermediaries.

Social and Community Planning Research—Take up of Income Support amongst Older Citizens.

Centre for Research in Social Policy, Loughborough University—Earnings Top Up Staff Panel.

Centre for Research in Social Policy, Loughborough University—Invalidity Benefit and the Contributory principle.

Alan Hedges—Pensions and Retirement Planning.

Alan Hedges—Behavioural Response to the evidence requirements.

Andrew Irving Associates—Counter fraud publicity.

Research Surveys of Great Britain—Awareness of counter fraud activity—benchmarking exercise.

One World—New Deal for Lone Parents: development of publicity work.

Navigator—Fraud: attitudes to national benefit fraud hotline publicity.

Reflexions—Fraud: reporting changes in circumstances.

Michael Herbert—Pensions: approaches to information material.

Research contracts are normally let by competitive tender, though the department also makes use of the Central Office of Information's framework agreement with approved suppliers. Single tender may be used for example where a supplier has special expertise or experience, is the sole supplier or has sole access to records or data, or in cases of extreme urgency. Details of organisations who have tendered unsuccessfully for contracts is commercial in confidence.

Lone Parents

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish a leaflet informing lone parents what help they can expect, and when, if they obtain paid work. [38234]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There are already leaflets available which give information on the benefits payable to families in work with low incomes, including lone parents. Leaflet NI261 is a guide to Family Credit and leaflet RR2 is a guide to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Leaflet LP15 on the New Deal for Lone Parents outlines the help available for lone parents trying to get into work and gives a summary of the help available through benefits once the lone parent has obtained work.

Benefits Agency staff and New Deal for Lone Parents personal advisers are also available to give information on the precise amount of benefit available in each individual's circumstances. In the New Deal for Lone Parents, that advice is a component of the package of tailored help and advice provided for individual participants.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 505, on lone parents, if she will update her earlier answer to cover the period from 23 July 1997 to 28 February 1998. [37593]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Information on the operation of the New Deal for Lone Parents is available up to and including 28 February 1998.

22,127 lone parents have been contacted.

5,249 initial interviews have been arranged, and 4,395 lone parents have attended interviews.

3,936 lone parents have agreed to participate in the programme following initial interviews.

1,289 lone parents have found jobs following agreement to participate in the programme.

A full independent evaluation of the New Deal for Lone Parents is being undertaken, to report in Autumn 1999. This will assess the overall effectiveness of the programme in helping lone parents move into employment.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Primary Schools Funding

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the funding rules for primary schools whereby income is lost due to a transfer of parents from income support to family credit. [34236]

Mr. Byers: There are no plans at present to change the funding rules for primary schools in this respect. Under Local Management of Schools, Local Education Authorities are responsible for devising and revising the formula used to allocate funds to schools. Some Authorities use pupils' entitlement to free school meals, which is triggered when a parent is in receipt of income support or income-based job seekers allowance, to allocate additional funding to schools. Families transferring from income support to family credit lose their entitlement to free school meals. Authorities may therefore need to consider whether their formulae should reflect this.

However, I understand that Oldham LEA's LMS formula uses entitlement to clothing grant rather than free school meals as the proxy for distributing additional funding to schools. Pupils from families in receipt of family credit or income support are automatically entitled to clothing grant. The change in benefit entitlement should not therefore affect Oldham schools' funding.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list applications to run education action zones received from (a) local education authorities and (b) other organisations; [36068]

(2) if he will list the private sector organisations which have applied to run education action zones; [36069]

(3) if he will list applications to run education action zones where the proposed zone crosses local education authority boundaries. [36070]

Mr. Byers: We have received 60 applications and intend to announce details of those which have been approved in due course.

Child Labour

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to the International Labour Organisation to eradicate child labour. [36541]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government strongly support the International Labour Organisation's proposal for a new Convention to eliminate the most intolerable forms of child labour. The UK will be actively involved in negotiating the new instrument during the ILO Conferences in 1998 and 1999. The UK has already committed £200,000 to the ILO's International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour (IPEC) to finance work in Asia to combat trafficking of women and children. The Government will announce further contributions to this worthwhile programme in the coming weeks.

Job Clubs

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are his plans for funding the activities of job clubs over the next three fiscal years; and how these have been affected by the New Deal programme. [37470]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 2 April 1998]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 7 April 1988:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question on the funding of Jobclubs over the next three fiscal years and how this has been affected by New Deal. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

Our planned expenditure on Jobclubs will be £24 million in each of the next three fiscal years.

In some areas we have also been looking at the advantages of combining some of our programmes, such as Jobclub and Jobplan, and delivering them through Programme Centres, which provide a one stop shop with greater scope for the more efficient use of resources and individualised packages of help for people.

The funding allocated to Jobclubs and Programme Centres reflects the likely demand among those people aged 25 and over who have been unemployed for six months or more. This takes account of the fact that many young people who might previously have depended on this provision will now be able to take advantage instead of the much more extensive extra help provided by New Deal.

My District Managers have recently undertaken a consultation exercise with local New Deal partners, with regard to our mainstream programmes, to determine which types of provision will be most effective to meet the needs of each locality. Where local partnerships decide that Jobclub or Programme Centre places should form part of the New Deal Gateway, they can purchase additional places on these programmes using New Deal funding.

I hope this is helpful.

Open Access Project

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to widen the scope of the open access project; and within what timetable. [37582]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mrs. Theresa May, dated 7 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question concerning the plans to widen the scope of the open access project; and within what timetable. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

The Employment Service is currently piloting ten open access kiosks in Jobcentres in Newcastle, South Manchester and Wiltshire, and we will be evaluating the use of the kiosks over the next few months. We will be making a decision on the future use of open access kiosks in the light of our evaluation of the pilot schemes and the availability of resources. The Employment Service is keen to use new technology to improve its services, and I expect the open access pilot to make a key contribution to this.

I hope this is helpful.

School Inspections

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how the random sample of schools inspected in 1994–95 and to be re-inspected in autumn 1998 was chosen by Ofsted; what advice was given to Her Majesty's Chief Inspector on how to ensure a random, balanced sample of schools; and by whom that advice was given; [37683]

(2) how many primary schools in England and Wales which were last inspected in 1994–95 are being inspected in autumn 1998; and what estimate he has made of the total cost of those inspections. [37684]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 April 1998]: These are matters for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the library.

Literacy Strategy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list the external bodies involved in the drafting of the literacy strategy; and if he will publish details of the research work on which the (a) concept and (b) details of the literacy strategy are based; [37762]

(2) if he will list the external bodies who were consulted prior to the development of the literacy strategy. [37763]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The literacy strategy is based on recommendations of the Literacy Task Force, established in may 1996 by the then Shadow Secretary of State for Education and Employment. Its membership was as follows: Professor Michael Barber (Chair), University of London Institute of Education; John Botham, Headteacher, Greenwood Junior School, Nottingham; Ken Follett, Novelist; Simon Goodenough, Chair of Governors, Queen Elizabeth Community College, Devon; Mary Gray, Retired Headteacher, Fair Furlong School Bristol; David Pitt-Watson, Deloitte & Touche; David Reynolds, Professor Education, University of Newcastle; Anne Waterhouse, Headteacher, Asmall County Primary School, Lancashire; and Diane Wright, a parent.

The Task Force drew widely on evidence of what works in this and other countries and took account of evidence from inspection reports and surveys from OFSTED. It consulted very widely before recommending that the National Literacy Project offered the best model for urgently achieving the improvement in literacy needed in our schools.

Job Vacancies (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the number of job vacancies in the (a) West Chelmsford parliamentary constituency and (b) Chelmsford Local Authority area in each of the last six months for which figures are available. [37877]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Simon Burns, dated 7 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question in which you asked for a list of the numbers of job vacancies in the West Chelmsford Parliamentary constituency area and the Chelmsford Local Authority area in each of the last six months for which figures are available. This is something that fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

Vacancy data is only available by Jobcentre areas. West Chelmsford Parliamentary constituency and Chelmsford Local Authority area are both served by Chelmsford Jobcentre.

Vacancies notified to this Jobcentre were:

September 1997: 734

October 1997: 587

November 1997: 782

December 1997: 584

January 1998: 248

February 1998: 591

I hope this is helpful.

National Insurance

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the annual cost to (a) higher education and (b) further education of the changes in employers' national insurance contributions announced in the Budget. [38316]

Dr. Howells: The Department is currently discussing estimates of these costs with the relevant Funding Councils. I will write to the hon. Member when these discussions have been completed.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 8 April 1998

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Listed Sporting Events

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 368, on the Advisory Group on Listed Events, what is the cost of the group to public funds; how many witnesses have been called by the group, and if he will list them; and which member of the group was an expert on Rugby League Football. [37846]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Chairman and members of the Advisory Group on Listed Events were unpaid. Their expenses incurred in travelling to the meetings of the Group were paid from public funds at a cost of £1,499.78. The group heard oral evidence from the following:

Independent Television Commission:

Ms Sheila Cassells

Ms Sarah Thane

Major Spectator Sport Division, Central Council for Physical Recreation:

Lord Alexander of Weedon

David Glencross QC

Mr. Maurice Lindsay

Nr. Nigel Hook

The England and Wales Cricket Board:

Lord McLaurin of Knebworth

Mr. Terry Blake

The BBC:

Mr. Will Wyatt

Mr. Jonathan Martin

Mr. Dominic Morris

BSkyB:

Mr. Vic Wakeling

Mr. Ray Gallegher

Mr. Jonathan Sykes

Mr. Phillip Jenner.

The members of the Advisory Group were appointed not for their knowledge of particular sports but to represent the interests of the general viewing public. All of the members did, however, have a good, general knowledge of sporting issues and were provided with appropriate background information on specific sports events.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to make a final decision on the listing of A and B grade sporting events for terrestrial television. [37917]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Advisory Group on Listed Events announced its recommendations to me on 20 March. These recommendations included the proposal that the list maintained under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996 should be made up of Group A and B events, these classifications defining the extent of the protection for television coverage of these events on generally available, terrestrial channels. I shall make my final decisions on this proposal, and on the events to be included on the list, when I have fully considered the implications of the Group's report. I hope to do so around the middle of May.

Lyric Theatre

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the Eyre review of the future of lyric theatre in London will be made public. [38845]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have been informed by Sir Richard Eyre that his review of the future of lyric theatre in London will be submitted to me by mid-May; the slight slippage on the original timetable is due to Sir Richard's work commitments. I have undertaken to publish the report shortly after I receive it. Publication will then be followed by consultation.

Children's Television Programmes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the current regulatory regime governing advertising during children's television programmes. [38302]

Mr. Fisher: The Independent Television Commission maintains and enforces a code of advertising standards and practice for commercial broadcasters, which includes detailed guidance on advertising and children. This guidance is reviewed by the Commission from time to time taking into account representations and available research as appropriate. The most recent review was conducted in 1997.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Cases (Inland Revenue)

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Crown Prosecution Service has given to the implications of the judgment of the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) in R v W and another; and what arrangements exist for liaison with the Inland Revenue about criminal cases with a tax aspect. [38837]

The Attorney-General: In the proceedings to which my hon. Friend refers the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) examined the respective of the Crown Prosecution Service and the Inland Revenue to pursue criminal proceedings. It confirmed that the Inland Revenue's common law power to prosecute is ancillary to, supportive of and limited by their duty to collect taxes. In contrast, the Crown Prosecution Service's statutory duty to take over and conduct criminal proceedings is free-standing, unconfined (for the purposes of the particular case) and reflects much wider public interest concerns and objectives. Accordingly, there is no logical inconsistency in the Crown's position if the Crown Prosecution Service prosecute in circumstances where the Revenue have decided not to.

This ruling accorded with the existing understanding of the Crown Prosecution Service and Inland Revenue as to their respective roles in relation to criminal investigation and prosecution and does not require any change of policy or practice on the part of either. Nor does it affect the position of those individuals who co-operate with the Inland Revenue on what is commonly referred to as 'the Hansard practice' or otherwise. Primary responsibility for investigation and prosecution in relation to alleged tax evasion rests with the Inland Revenue; proceedings brought by the Crown Prosecution Service will ordinarily encompass charges relating to tax evasion only in circumstances where that is incidental to allegations of non-fiscal criminal conduct. In such circumstances the Crown Prosecution Service and Inland Revenue liaise closely together. The arrangements for such liaison have recently been strengthened by the establishment of the 'Convention between Prosecuting Authorities to provide arrangements for ensuring effective co-ordination of decision making and handling in related cases which are the responsibility of different authorities'. Both the Crown Prosecution Service and Inland Revenue became signatories to that Convention when it was established on 11 February 1998. A copy of the Convention has been lodged in the Library of the House.

In R v W and others the applicants were charged on 27 July 1995 with offences of conspiracy to obtain property by deception (later changed to conspiracy to defraud) and conspiracy to commit false accounting in connection with the affairs of companies with which they were associated. The proceedings were transferred to the Crown Court on 6 November 1995. The prosecution case at this stage was that the motive for the alleged false accounting was partly to conceal the removal of company funds for purposes other than tax and partly the evasion of tax. The case in relation to false accounting was subsequently narrowed to allege only tax evasion. The Inland Revenue had, prior to the institution of the criminal proceedings, decided that its own inquiries should be pursued in relation to unpaid tax. This in turn led, in 1997, to a negotiated settlement of unpaid tax with the companies concerned.

The negotiation between Inland Revenue and the companies concerned was quite independent of the criminal proceedings although all parties were aware of their existence. Lord Justice Rose said in giving the judgment of the Court of Appeal:

"In any event we reject the suggestion that, because the prosecution case against both applicants on false accounting was previously based partly, but is now based solely, on tax evasion, this constitutes such a change that [the applicant], at the time of settlement by the companies was misled".

Audit Commission (Data Protection)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if the provisions in the Audit Commission Bill [Lords] relating to studies into the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of bodies subject to audit by the Commission permit (a) medical files containing health personal data processed by an NHS body to be used as part of a study into the economy, efficiency and effectiveness, (b) data matching studies with respect to any personal data held by a local authority and (c) medical files from one NHS body to be studied (i) in conjunction with similar files from another NHS body and (ii) in relation to files from a local authority. [38171]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

The Audit Commission Bill [Lords] consolidates the existing legislation on the Audit Commission. Auditors and the Commission have a power to obtain access to all such information including medical files, as they may reasonably require for the performance of any of their statutory functions, including studies into the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of bodies subject to audit. They must comply with Data Protection legislation, and the Commission has drawn up and published a Code of Data Matching Practice, endorsed by the Data Protection Agency, which it and auditors follow when data matching techniques are used.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 505, what is the status of the assurance given by his Permanent Secretary that an employment guarantee would be provided for five years for CSL staff relocating from Norwich to York; and what contingent liability his Department has assumed is needed to fund this commitment. [37988]

Mr. Rooker: The Permanent Secretary has not given such an assurance. However, in the event of relocation of the CSL Norwich to York, consideration would be given as to whether medium term assurances of continued employment should be offered to staff who transferred. The level of resulting contingent liabilities would be one of the factors considered before giving such assurances.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Central Science Laboratory (a) scientists and (b) non-scientists in Norwich are in (i) mobile and (ii) non-mobile grades. [37955]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The information requested on staff based at the Central Science Laboratory in Norwich is as follows:

	Scientists	Non-scientists
Mobile	78	4
Non-mobile	31	24
Total staff	109	28

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many food research projects submitted to his Department for funding by the Central Science Laboratory in (1) 1996–97 and (2) 1997–98 which were (i) commissioned, (ii) deemed by the independent appraisal panel to be of sufficient quality to merit departmental funding and (iii) not deemed to be of sufficient quality to merit such funding were based primarily at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich. [37957]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The information requested, relating to research proposals submitted by the Central Science Laboratory to my Department, for funding in 1996–97 and 1997–98, is detailed.

Notes:

1. Where n/a appears in the tables above, projects were appraised within MAFF with independent advice sought where necessary. These proposals were not considered by the independent Appraisal Panels. This is the case for all short term (applied) research proposals submitted to MAFF.
2. Proposals were not submitted from CSL York until 1997 (for funding in 1997–98), once staff had completed moves to CSL York from CSL Torry and CSL Slough.

Organophosphates

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the Government have spent in the last five years on research into the effects of pesticides based on organophosphorus compounds on the health of (a) cattle and (b) those working in the farming and horticulture industries. [38201]

Mr. Rooker: Applications for authorisations for veterinary medicines and pesticides are assessed against statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes the health and welfare of the treated animal and the user of the product. Research required to satisfy these criteria forms part of the information submitted by applicants and is paid for by them.

No MAFF-funded research has been carried out into the effects of organophosphorus (OP) compounds on the health of cattle.

In the past five years, the Government have commissioned work costing £3.6 million into the effects of OP pesticides on the health of those working in the farming and horticulture industries. In addition to this, the Institute of Occupational Medicine has been awarded £500,000 funded jointly by MAFF, the Department of Health and the Health and Safety Executive to research the possible long-term human health effects of OP sheep dips. Additional work on the effects of OP pesticides has been carried out separately by Research Councils.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take into account the views of the American National Academy of Science prior to proceeding with restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6. [38103]

Mr. Rooker: The Government issued for consultation their draft proposals for restrictions on the retail sale of food supplements containing vitamin B6 on 2 April 1998. The consultation period ends on 26 June 1998. If further data on the safety of vitamin B6 become available during the consultation period, including information from the US National Academy of Sciences, those data will be taken into account by the Government.

Salmon And Freshwater Fisheries Review Group

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the membership and terms of reference of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Review Group announced on 7 July 1997; and if he will make a statement. [38516]

Dr. John Cunningham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have appointed Professor Lynda Warren, Professor of Environmental Law at the University of Wales, to chair the independent Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Review Group. In addition, Dr. Nick Giles, Mr. John Golding, Dr. Keith Hendry, Mr. Derek Heselton MBE, Mr. David Hodgkiss, Mrs. Jean Howman, Mrs. Jane James, Dr. Mike Ladle, Mr. Frank Lythgoe, Mr. David Moore, Mr. Mervyn Mountjoy, Mr. Pat O'Reilly, Mr. Stanley Payne, Dr. Anne Powell, Professor Kerry Turner and Mr. John Williams have been appointed members.

The terms of reference for the Review Group are:

'To review existing policies and legislation in England and Wales concerning the management and conservation of salmon, trout, eels and freshwater fish and make recommendations. The review and recommendations should take particular account of:

- the need to maintain, and where appropriate enhance, biodiversity;
- the need to maximise the economic, social and recreational benefits derived from salmon and freshwater fisheries, taking account both of the interests of local communities and local factors and traditions;
- the need for management of fisheries to be on a fully sustainable basis, taking account of the precautionary approach.

The review should also consider other factors that may affect the development and sustainability of these fisheries.

The review should examine the institutional arrangements for the regulation and management of these fisheries (including the role of the public sector, the need to involve all interested parties, and arrangements in tidal and coastal waters) and how best such arrangements can be funded.'

Members have been appointed in an independent capacity on the basis of their individual knowledge and expertise of fisheries and/or related conservation issues. We believe the Group is well suited to making recommendations for the future management and conservation of salmon and freshwater fish and look forward to receiving its report in late 1999.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact the establishment of the Food Standards Agency will have on the role of the food safety activities of the Central Science Laboratory. [38347]

Mr. Rooker: The White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: a Force for Change": (Cmd 3830) proposes that the Food Standards Agency (FSA) should take the lead in commissioning research on food safety. It will be for the FSA to determine its own priorities and procedures for future research once it is established. However, the Government anticipate that the FSA will continue to commission research competitively, and that the Central Science Laboratory would compete for FSA research contracts, along with other research establishments.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he will make to ensure co-ordination of the relevant work of the Central Science Laboratory with that of the Institute of Food Research following the establishment of the Food Standards Agency. [38348]

Mr. Rooker: The Central Science Laboratory already collaborates with the Institute of Food Research and with many other research institutes and universities. This ensures that respective scientific expertise is effectively applied.

Measures are in hand to strengthen the links between the Central Science Laboratory and the Institute of Food Research including the intention to develop a collaborative framework agreement.

Consumer Education

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the projects which received funding in the United Kingdom in 1997 under European Communities budget line "B5–102, Consumer Education"; and what was the role of his Department in the determination of such projects. [36952]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

UK bodies bid for Commission funding for specific projects. We do not yet have details of projects funded under budget line B5–102 in the UK during 1997. It is for the Commission to determine how to allocate funds within budget line B5–102 in accordance with Community rules.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Aid Projects (Environmental Assessments)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what representations she has made to the European Commission about the environmental impact assessment of aid projects; [38406]

(2) what representations she has made to the European Commission about consultations with project beneficiaries and local communities in LDCs about the environmental impact of development co-operation programmes; [38407]

(3) what plans she has to bring about reform of the environmental assessment of EU aid during the current United Kingdom Presidency. [38408]

Mr. Foulkes: During the Presidency this Department's officials are continuing, through dialogue with Commission officials in Brussels and in delegations, and through our participation in the Commission's Management Committees, to encourage the Commission to integrate fully environmental considerations into the design of its projects, to improve environmental impact assessments and to promote the development of adequate stakeholder participation and consultation, including on the environmental impact of development projects.

An important element of this will be to monitor the Commission's implementation of the recommendations of a recent independent evaluation of environmental performance of EC-funded programmes in developing countries. This evaluation highlighted the need to improve the performance of the Commission in assessing and integrating environmental considerations in their development programmes, including through training and guidance for staff and through better consultation with beneficiaries. Further to the evaluation, the Commission has contracted UK consultants to improve environmental assessment and consultation procedures in their programmes to Asia, Latin America, Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States. We will monitor progress closely. We have also seconded a Social Development adviser to the Commission to help them to promote stakeholder participation and consultation in development programmes.

South Africa

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress her Department has made towards negotiating a bilateral trade and development agreement including a free trade area with the Republic of South Africa; and if she will make a statement. [38337]

Mr. Foulkes: The UK Presidency is working for early conclusion of a Trade and Co-operation Agreement between South Africa and the European Union which best meets the needs of South Africa and her neighbours as well as the EU. Both sides hope for an agreement by mid-year. Negotiators from the European Commission and South Africa will hold the next round of discussions later this month.

Development Assistance

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of United Kingdom net development assistance has been (a) bilateral and (b) channelled through multilateral development institutions, the EU and the Commonwealth in 1997–98; and what will be the comparable figure in 1998–99. [38379]

Mr. Foulkes: Expenditure data for 1997–98 are still being brought to account. Detailed analysis will be provided in British Aid Statistics later in the year. We estimate though that in 1997–98 50 per cent. of development assistance will be spent through bilateral channels and 50 per cent. through multilateral institutions. Around 31 per cent. of development assistance will be spent through the EC.

In 1998–99, on present plans, we estimate that 46 per cent. will be spent through bilateral channels and 54 per cent. through multilateral institutions. Around 35 per cent. of development assistance will be channelled through the EC.

Know How Fund

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in respect of which countries Know How Fund support will be (a) reduced or (b) discontinued in 1998–99. [38192]

Mr. Foulkes: The Know How Fund is managed with some flexibility between country programmes within financial years. Levels of expenditure will depend partly on emerging needs and speed of project implementation. Our aim is to reduce expenditure over time on the countries most advanced in transition. Support is not being discontinued in any country in 1998–99.

Community Aid

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what effect the establishing of the joint service for the implementation of community aid to developing countries will have on her Department's aid management. [38339]

Mr. Foulkes: The establishment of the Joint Service is formally an internal management issue for the Commission but this Department has a strong interest in the effectiveness of the new arrangements. We are in close contact with the Commission about the restructuring and will seek to establish effective relations with the new structure when it becomes operational later this year. Other than this, the new structure will have no direct effect on the Department's aid management procedures.

Southern Africa

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her counterparts in Southern African countries other than the Republic of South Africa about the proposed trade and development agreement and free trade area. [38336]

Mr. Foulkes: The proposed EU/South Africa trade and co-operation agreement will be discussed at next month's ACP-EU Council meeting in Barbados, which the Secretary of State will co-chair. We want an agreement which takes account of the concerns of South Africa's neighbours.

Direct Budget Aid

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to her EU counterparts about converting Community funding into direct budget aid. [38338]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has made no such representation.

Afghan Donors Group

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to the oral answer of 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 489, what are the date and agenda for the next meeting of the Afghan Donors Group. [37712]

Mr. Foulkes: The date of the next meeting of the Afghan donors group is 5 May 1998. The provisional agenda is as follows:

The political and security situation in Afghanistan

Strategic Framework and international assistance strategy

Any other business.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to the oral answer of 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 489, what is the composition of the Afghan Donors Group. [37711]

Mr. Foulkes: The Afghanistan Donor Support Group is an informal grouping of donors. Representatives of the following countries and organisations attended the last meeting, held in New York, and have been invited to the London meeting:

Australia, Canada, Denmark, European Commission, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States;

Belarus and Ukraine

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what projects are currently being pursued to assist the economic development of (a) Belarus and (b) Ukraine. [37368]

Mr. Foulkes: In Belarus we are supporting the development of small and medium enterprises, for example through the creation of small business centres in Brest, Gomel and Grodno. We are also providing training for Trade Union members through the Jim Conway Foundation and plan to look for further opportunities to work with the NGO sector. In Ukraine we are supporting a wide variety of projects in the following sectors: agriculture, energy, financial services, small and medium enterprise development and good government.

SCOTLAND

Skye Bridge

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in respect of how many of those refusing to pay tolls on the Skye Bridge a decision was taken not to prosecute. [37562]

Mr. McLeish: The Procurator Fiscal at Dingwall has decided to take no proceedings against 133 individuals in respect of 188 charges of an alleged refusal to pay the tolls.

In addition, 138 people (some of whom may also be included in the figure of 133 above) were prosecuted for refusing to pay the tolls. The charges against these people were contained in 324 summary complaints. The Procurator Fiscal decided to take no further proceedings in relation to 177 of those complaints.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to public funds arising from the legal action taken against those refusing to pay tolls on the Skye Bridge. [37560]

Mr. McLeish: Expenditure has been incurred by various Government Departments in relation to the prosecutions of those persons refusing to pay tolls on the Skye Bridge.

The Scottish Court Service incurred additional costs for the provision of temporary shrieval cover amounting in total to £15,000. The Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service engaged casual administrative and legal staff at a cost of approximately £11,500. Expenses were also incurred in respect of civilian witnesses who attended to give evidence at the trials. The cost of the expenditure on these witnesses could not be made available without disproportionate cost.

The Northern Constabulary have incurred costs of £6,661 in relation to releasing police constables to attend at trials to give evidence.

The Scottish Legal Aid Board have paid out £1,708.03 in settlement of legal aid accounts. Further accounts totalling £12,500 have been submitted and are under consideration.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were (a) prosecuted, (b) fined and (c) imprisoned for refusing to pay tolls on the new Skye Bridge. [37561]

Mr. McLeish: In the period to 8 April 1998 138 people were prosecuted for refusing to pay tolls on the new Skye Bridge. The charges against them were contained in 324 summary complaints. 128 of those prosecuted were fined.

No one has been imprisoned for refusing to pay tolls on the Bridge.

Solway Firth (Fishing)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish his conclusion on mechanisms to maintain the present fishing arrangements on the Solway Firth; and what plans he has to introduce legislation on this matter. [37603]

Mr. Macdonald: It has long been recognised that fishing rights within the Solway can give rise to jurisdictional difficulties. Local discussions were held in autumn 1997 with a view to protecting existing fishing rights in the event of a fixed jurisdictional boundary being established. The Government are still considering how this protection might best be achieved.

Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Government will review the legislation relating to the Environment Agency and Scottish Environment Protection Agency in line with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution. [38773]

Mr. Dewar: I am today setting in hand a review, jointly with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Secretary of State for Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. It will examine the legislation relating to the Environment Agency in England and Wales and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, with a view to identifying any barriers preventing the Agencies from taking an integrated approach to the environment. The Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution recommended in its nineteenth report (Cm 3165) that such a review should be carried out within 3 years of the Agencies' taking up their functions in April 1996.

The terms of reference of the review are:

To investigate the possible rationalisation of the regulatory mechanisms with the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency operate, and the opportunities for integrating regulatory regimes which currently operate on a similar basis but under different legislation, so as:

to identify any significant barriers to integration within each of the Agencies, whose removal would improve the quality of regulation by producing worthwhile improvements in environmental protection and enhancement, customer service and business efficiency;

to establish whether such barrier could be overcome by administrative means or management action by the Agencies; and insofar as this is not the case, to recommend legislative changes to enable them to be removed.

The review is not intended to consider the integration of the philosophical approaches underlying the different regulatory regimes, which are often bound up with European Union legislation. Nor is the review considering integration of the Agencies themselves.

The review will be carried out by the relevant Government Departments and the Agencies. Interested bodies will be invited to contribute their views at an early stage. We envisage that the review will take about a year to complete.

Any legislative changes in England and Wales arising out of the review would be considered by Parliament. Since the results of the review will be submitted around the time of the establishment of the Scottish Parliament, it would fall to Scottish Ministers to consider whether to put corresponding proposals to the Scottish Parliament.

TREASURY

Savings (Taxation)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was received (a) through taxes on savings and (b) taxes on savings on people over retirement age in each of the last three years. [36825]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Available estimates of the income tax liability on returns from savings are given in the table. These are based on projections of the 1995–96 Survey of Personal Incomes and other statistical sources in line with the economic assumptions of the Financial Statement and Budget Report, March 1998. The main components of savings income are bank and building society interest and dividends. Taxpayers over retirement age include women aged 60 and over and men aged 65 and over.

Full year yield from taxing savings income

	All taxpayers	Taxpayers over retirement age
1996–97	5.9	2.1
1998–99	7.0	2.6

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the financial impact of his Budget measures for motorists in receipt of mobility allowances. [37251]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 April 1998]: There were no specific measures in the Budget targeted at motorists in receipt of mobility allowances. Some motorists in receipt of Disability Living Allowance will benefit from the freeze in Vehicle Excise Duty, as well as the new reduced rate of £100 for the smallest and least polluting cars that will be introduced from next year. The uprating of bus fuel duty rebate, and the £500 million additional funding for public transport, will help provide affordable alternatives to the car for all motorists. In line with the Government's existing commitment, road fuel duties were increased by at least 6 per cent. in real terms on Budget day. These increases are expected to save 1.7 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010, and all motorists will be affected by these changes.

Child Care Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the combined marginal withdrawal rate faced by someone who is receiving partial help with childcare costs under the proposed tax credit scheme and who is also (a) paying basic rate tax and NICs or (b) paying basic rate tax and NICs, and receiving housing benefit and council tax benefit. [36026]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The Working Families Tax Credit will provide substantially more financial support than is available at present under Family Credit and hence will significantly improve the reward for working. For example a two-child family with an after income tax of £250 and £60 a week in childcare costs will receive £36.70 more a week in WFTC than under FC.

All those above the income threshold and still receiving the WFTC, including the childcare tax credit, will face marginal deduction rates of:

(a) 69.85 per cent. if they are paying basic rate tax and NICs (reduced from 79.9 per cent. at present); or

(b) 95.48 per cent. if they are paying basic rate tax and NICs, and receiving housing benefit and council tax benefit (reduced from 96.99 per cent. at present).

However, due to the increased income from the Working Families Tax Credit, very few families will face the combined tapers of WFTC, housing benefit and council tax benefit. About 20,000 families, 0.1 per cent. of those paying tax or NICs will face combined marginal deduction rates greater than 90 per cent. Less than 2 per cent. of families on WFTC will face all three tapers.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the potential for UK firms to benefit from increased international business as a result of their expertise in the management of Private Finance Initiative projects. [38240]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Treasury has received numerous visits and expressions of interest regarding the PFI from countries worldwide keen to learn of our experiences, and UK firms would of course be entitled to bid for PFI contracts abroad just as foreign companies are entitled to bid for contracts let here. PFI "practitioners" in the private sector too have reported heightened overseas interest.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has evaluated into the relative efficiency of the PFI against other forms of Government funding. [38221]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Government departments assess the relative efficiency of the PFI option, which itself relies on a competitive bidding procedure, against possible alternative forms of funding prior to the procurement of each service required. We have not yet done any general post-contract research into the value for money savings that have been achieved by proceeding via the PFI route, though the NAO has recently published four reports on the outcomes of PFI procurements in specific areas.

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 567, if he will make a statement amending paragraph 3.32 of the Red Book to reflect those ranges of weekly earnings in which employers will pay higher employer's NICs in respect of employees earning between £81 and £450 a week. [36441]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: It is estimated that employer's national insurance contribution will rise in respect of approximately 2.1 million employees earning between £81 and £450 a week.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the total amount of tax relief lost from (a) general PEPs and (b) single PEPs as of 5 April 1999 under the Budget decision to allow them continue in terms of (i) Capital Gains Tax relieved and (ii) dividend income tax relieved based on (A) the current rate of 20 per cent. and (B) the proposed new rate of 10 per cent. [36329]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: All PEPs held at 5 April 1999 can continue to be held as PEPs, outside the new savings account, but with the same tax advantages as the new account. The Exchequer cost of tax relief for these PEPs is estimated at around £900 million for 1999–2000, which includes a cost of £425 million for capital gains tax, and £475 million for income tax, of which some £200 million relates to the payment of tax credits at 10 per cent. on dividends on shares in UK companies, and £175 million is higher rate relief. Payment of tax credits at 20 per cent. would raise the cost by around £200 million. Estimates are subject to considerable uncertainty, since they are dependent on a range of assumptions including the level of take up, stock market performance and interest rates.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the total amount of tax relief forgone through the operation of ISAs in each of the 10 years of their intended lifespan, in terms of (a) Capital Gains Tax relieved, (b) dividend income tax relieved and (c) income tax on deposit interest relieved. [36325]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The total Exchequer cost of tax relief for the new savings accounts, including PEPs held at 5 April 1999 and remaining TESSAs, is estimated at around £1.6 billion for 1999–2000, which includes a cost of £425 million for capital gains tax, and £1,150 million for income tax, of which £225 million relates to the payment of tax credits on dividends on shares in UK companies and £250 million is higher rate relief. The total cost 2000–01 is estimated at some £1.8 billion, which includes a cost of £475 million for capital gains tax, and £1,325 million for income tax, of which £225 million relates to the payment of tax credits on dividends and £275 million is higher rate relief.

In future years the Government intend to continue spending broadly as much on the new savings accounts as would have been spent on PEPs and TESSAs. Estimates are subject to considerable uncertainty, since they are dependent on a range of assumptions including the level of take up, stock market performance and interest rates.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the additional cost to the Exchequer of introducing the individual savings account in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02, (d) 2002–03 and (e) 2003–04. [36397]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Red Book shows an estimated yield of £30 million in 1999–2000, and an estimated cost of £30 million in 2000–01, compared with the cost of PEPs and TESSAs continuing with their current tax reliefs. The Government intend to continue to spend broadly as much on the new savings accounts in later years as would have been spent on PEPs and TESSAs.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if effective bed and breakfasts from a personal holding into a PEP account held by the same beneficiary will be admissible under Budget changes to the Capital Gains Tax rules. [36802]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The new CGT matching rule applies only to disposals and acquisitions undertaken by a person in the same capacity. Shares acquired by an individual through a PEP manager will be acquired in a different capacity to shares sold by the taxpayer outside the PEP. So the new matching rule will not apply.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries in Europe operate a capital gains tax system which involves 18 or more different rates of capital gains tax. [36788]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: None. They either have a single rate or a small number of rates, as in the United Kingdom which presently, for individuals, has 3 rates and will continue to do so under the reforms proposed in the Budget.

Budget Green Book

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason no green book was published with this year's budget. [37520]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The Financial Statement and Budget Report released on 17 March contained an environmental assessment of the Budget measures which will have a significant effect on the environment. The inclusion of the assessment within the Financial Statement and Budget Report demonstrates the Government's commitment to put the environment at the heart of the Government policy, and ensure that all environmental considerations are given full weight when formulating policy.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government plans to take to implement its policy of a stable and competitive exchange rate. [37759]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The Government believe in the value of a stable and competitive exchange rate over the medium term, consistent with the objective of price stability. The Government are pursuing sound, long-term macroeconomic policies, which is the only sure path to exchange rate stability.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if people obtaining the disabled person's tax credit will be entitled to the same benefit payments as recipients of the disability working allowance. [37842]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The changes to tapers and thresholds announced in the Budget mean that most people will receive more from the Disabled Person's Tax Credit than they would have received from the Disability Working Allowance for a given level of pay, and no-one will receive less.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to begin consultation on his proposals to reform vehicle excise duty; what form the consultation will take; and if he will make a statement. [37285]

Dawn Primarolo: A consultation document seeking views on the options for reforming vehicle excise duty will be published shortly. The aim is to introduce a system which provides for a £50 reduction in vehicle excise duty for smaller, cleaner cars next year. In the meantime, vehicle excise duty rates are being frozen.

Customs and Excise (Tendering Contracts)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer upon what basis the choice of law clauses and exclusive jurisdiction clauses relating to English law and the English courts have been inserted into tendering contracts by H. M. Customs and Excise for civil recovery services. [34409]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer March 1998]: Civil recovery services undertaken in Scotland are governed by Scots Law. The strategy adopted by Customs in stipulating that the civil recovery services contracts, including the contract in Scotland, would be governed by English law was based on legal and practical grounds which are set out.

Under contract law, the proper law of the contract is that which the parties stipulate;

Due to the complexity of these contracts, the need to establish uniformity and the fact that a single service provider may provide services in two countries eg England and Scotland, a policy decision was taken to stipulate that the contracts will be governed by English Law;

The aforementioned was influenced by the fact that the majority of the service requirement under the contracts would fall within English law; and

The overall contract management and policy responsibility for civil recovery services in Customs is located in England.

However, there is an opportunity for tenderers to register any disagreement with the General Conditions of Contract as an integral part of the tender process. The resolution of any disagreements would be a matter for post tender negotiation between Customs and the successful tenderer before award of Contract. Customs will not object to a request that the Contract be governed by Scots Law, if the service provider is based in Scotland.

Gaming Duty

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the casino industry on the proposed increase in gaming duty. [38110]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received several representations from the casino industry about the impact of the gaming duty changes, mainly on the larger London clubs.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the impact on the profitability of British casino companies of the increase in gaming duty announced in the Budget; [38108]

(2) what assessment he has made of the economic impact of the increase in gaming duty announced in the Budget. [38109]

Dawn Primarolo: Overall the casino industry is undertaxed compared to most other betting and gaming sectors when looked at in terms of the effective rate of tax on the net consumer spend (broadly equivalent to the house winnings). In determining the changes to the duty rates and thresholds careful consideration was given to the overall profitability of the industry as well as the likely impact on casino companies, taking account of their turnover, profitability, location and ability to bear the cost of the increase. The increase in gaming duty will raise £25 million in the first full year.

MI5

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy towards the publication in the press of disclosures by former MI5 officers. [37925]

Mr. Darling: The Government's policy in this area is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further progress has been made towards resolving cases of personal pensions mis-selling. [38751]

Mrs. Liddell: Today, I have placed in the Library a table showing what progress has been made by the 41 firms the Government have been monitoring in the period up to 31 March 1998. The table shows that, in line with the trend established in recent months, firms have continued to make progress, with some 69 per cent. of their priority cases now completed.

The Government continue to look to firms for their ongoing commitment to deliver the priority targets. I hope they will also work constructively with the regulators on the second phase of the review, building on the consultation launched by the Financial Services Authority and the Personal Investment Authority last month. The Association of British Insurers (ABI) has set the right tone at the start of the process, and I hope that its pragmatic approach to the issues raised by phase 2 of the review will continue over the months ahead.

I have raised in this house on a number of occasions my concern that all pension firms, not just the large firms I am monitoring, must get on with the personal pensions review. Ultimately, responsibility for conducting the reviews rests with the firm concerned—be it a large company or a small IFA. However experience does show that cooperation and collaboration between firms can lead to progress in finding solutions to technical problems which are widely encountered. Recently, ABI announced an initiative to assist and to encourage IFAs to carry out their reviews. These proposals give welcome recognition to the fact that each and every firm's good name is dependent on the reputation of the industry as a whole, and I hope that early implementation of the proposals is achieved.

Civil Registration System

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to improve public access to the Civil Registration System. [36828]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Phil Woolas, dated 8 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics(ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on improving public access to the civil registration system.

The public access the civil registration system in many ways. The newly established Family Records Centre (FRC) in Islington provides improved facilities for people who wish to search the indexes of birth, marriage and death in England Wales since 1837. Certificates of these events can be purchased via the FRC or by post, phone or fax. Whilst service developments are planned, some significant improvements (such as access to the records themselves or computerisation of the indexes) require legislative change or significant investment.

At a local level, the public register births and deaths and use the civil marriage facilities in Register Offices and Approved Premises. Local Authorities are responsible for the provision of Register Office facilities and are increasingly upgrading them. They are also increasingly tailoring the service provision to their local circumstances. The Registrar General provides advice to Local Authorities and monitors the standard of the local services.

Lloyd's of London

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net contribution of Lloyd's of London to the United Kingdom balance of payments over (a) the period 1 January 1988 to 1 January 1992 and (b) 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1997. [38178]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 April 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Philip Hammond, dated 8 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the net contribution of Lloyds of London to the United Kingdom balance of payments.

Information relating to the contribution to the current account of the Balance of Payments of Lloyd's of London from 1988 to 1997 can be derived from data available on the ONS database, which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. The estimates for underwriting services (series HCCZ) include receipts for management services provided to overseas members of Lloyd's syndicates. Estimates for earnings on portfolio investment overseas (series HCPB) include income on funds which are held overseas to support business underwritten in those countries. This income is net of earnings distributed to Lloyd's overseas members.

Labour Market Statistics

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what further action is being taken to improve the accuracy and reliability of Labour Market Statistics; and if he will make a statement; [38370]

(2) what plans he has to increase the frequency and coverage of the Labour Force Survey; and if he will make a statement. [38369]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 8 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions on the accuracy and reliability of labour market statistics and the Labour Force Survey in particular.

On 3 February, I announced major improvements to labour market statistics. As part of the package of proposals, I announced that greater prominence than previously would be given to the Labour Force Survey (LFS) and to the integration of these results with data from other sources.

From April 22nd 1998 data from the LFS for the latest 3 months will be published every month. Coverage of the LFS results will be extended to the UK. The case for a larger LFS capable of providing reliable estimates for each single month is being considered in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

These improvements to the way ONS publishes its labour market statistics are being supported by a great deal of work in improving the methods of data collection, getting more out of the data, and reconciling the different sources. In parallel with improvements in other ONS surveys, methodological improvements in the LFS will be put in place. More information about these improvements is available in the February 1998 edition of Labour Market Trends, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Teenage Mothers

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children were born to teenage mothers in the Wakefield District (a) in 1980 and (b) in the last year for which figures are available. [38281]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jon Trickett, dated 8 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your question on children born to teenage mothers.

The numbers of livebirths in 1980 and 1996 to mothers aged under 20 who were resident in Wakefield Metropolitan County District were as follows:

360 in 1996.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the perinatal death rate of children born to teenage mothers (a) living in the Wakefield District and (b) in England as a whole. [38323]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jon Trickett, dated 8 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the perinatal death rate of children.

The perinatal death rate per 1,000 live and stillbirths of children born to teenage mothers in 1993–1996 (combined) was (a) 11.0 in Wakefield Health Authority, and (b) 11.1 in England as a whole.

Capital Transfer Tax

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what arrangements exist for the enforcement of access to (a) heritage land, (b) property, (c) works of art and (d) chattels in respect of items which have been the subject of exemption from capital transfer tax; [37498]

(2) what arrangements exist for the policing of assets and payment of capital transfer tax in the case of assets which have been the subject of heritage status capital transfer tax exemption and which are subsequently sold by the beneficiaries of legacies or their trusts; [37499]

(3) what arrangements are made for access to (a) heritage land, (b) property, (c) works of art and (d) chattels by the general public where such access forms part of the agreement for exemption of such items from capital transfer tax. [37497]

Dawn Primarolo: Owners' compliance with their undertakings relating to tax exempt land and buildings is regularly monitored on behalf of the Inland Revenue by the appropriate heritage advisory agency. As part of this monitoring, owners have to submit annual reports which include matters regarding the provision of public access, and there are on-site inspections every five years. In addition, the Inland Revenue separately review all cases at five yearly intervals.

Public access and other conditions relating to exempt works of art and chattels are monitored directly by the Inland Revenue. Each case is reviewed every five years and there is an annual selective audit of objects to which public access is only by prior appointment.

Any material failure by an owner to comply with the undertakings results in a tax charge on the current value of the asset.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the definition of heritage land for the purposes of capital transfer tax exemption; [37490]

(2) what is the definition of heritage property for the purposes of capital transfer tax exemption; [37491]

(3) what is the definition of heritage works of art for the purpose of capital transfer tax exemption; [37492]

(4) what is the definition of heritage chattels for the purpose of capital transfer tax exemption. [37493]

Dawn Primarolo: Under existing law (section 31 Inheritance Tax Act 1984) conditional exemption may apply to the following assets:

pictures, prints, books, manuscripts, works of art or scientific collections of national, scientific, historic or artistic interest; land of outstanding scenic or historic or scientific interest;

building of outstanding historic or architectural interest, and any land essential for the protection of their character and amenities; any objects historically associated with a qualifying building.

A number of changes to the exemption scheme were announced in the recent Budget. An Inland Revenue press release on Budget Day set out the proposed changes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Inland Revenue's arrangements for valuing (a) land, (b) property, (c) works of art and (d) chattels for capital transfer tax purposes. [37494]

Dawn Primarolo: The value of an asset is not a relevant factor in deciding a claim for conditional exemption from inheritance tax (or its predecessor, capital transfer tax). When an asset ceases to be conditionally exempt, tax is charged on its market value at that time. For this purpose, the Valuation Office Agency advises on the value of land and buildings, and the Heritage Section of the Capital Taxes Office deals with valuation of works of art and other chattels.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total value of the exemption to capital transfer tax in the case of (a) heritage land, (b) property, (c) works of art and (d) chattels in each of the last five years. [37495]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is not available in the form requested. The estimated cost to the Exchequer of conditional exemption from inheritance tax (and its predecessor, capital transfer tax) is as follows:

£ million

Year	Amount of relief
	Land & Buildings	Chattels[1]
1992–93	[2]negligible	40
1993–94	[2]negligible	40
1994–95	[2]negligible	55
1995–96	5	25
1996–97	5	30

[1] Includes works of art
[2] Negligible means less than £3 million

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to review the arrangements for the exemption from capital transfer tax of (a) heritage land, (b) property and (c) chattels; and if he will make a statement. [37496]

Dawn Primarolo: In his recent Budget my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced changes to strengthen the conditions of inheritance tax (and its predecessor capital transfer tax) exemptions for heritage assets. An Inland Revenue press release on Budget Day set out the proposed changes.

"Financial Statement and Budget Report"

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will expand Table B24, page 136, in the FSBR, March 1998, to give the relevant figures for (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03, using the assumption of 0.75 per cent. real growth in public spending after 1998–99. [36375]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Government have not published spending plans beyond 1998–99. However, figures for the years 1999–2000 to 2002–2003, based on real growth in public spending of 3/4 per cent. a year from 1999–2000 onwards, can be calculated as follows:

Projections for General Government Receipts (GGR), General Government Expenditure (GGE) and the Control Total as a percentage of GPD from 1999–2000 to 2002–2003 are set out in tables B8 and B12 of the FSBR (March 1998). Revised forecasts for "net taxes and NICs" were published in table B8 on 27 March 1998, Official Report, column 348.

Table B5 of the FSBR contains medium-term forecasts of the public sector current balance, borrowing requirement and general government financial deficit on a UK national accounts basis. As these projections exclude windfall tax receipts and associated spending and the UK definition of GGFD is slightly different from the Maastricht version, the following small adjustments are necessary to produce figures on a consistent basis to those set out in Table B24: the current balance should be adjusted downwards by 0.1 per cent. of GDP throughout; the PSBR should be adjusted upwards by 0.2 per cent. of GDP in 1999–2000 and 0.1 per cent. of GDP in later years; and GGFD should be adjusted upwards by 0.2 per cent. of GDP in 1999–2000, 0.1 per cent. of GDP in 2000–01, 0.2 per cent. of GDP in 2001–02 and 0.1 per cent. of GDP in 2002–03.

Medium-term projections of the public sector financial deficit can be derived by adjusting the PSBR slightly to exclude financial transactions Financial transactions are 0.1 per cent. of GDP in 1999–2000 and in 2000–01, 0.3 per cent. of GDP in 2001–02 and zero in 2002–03.

GGE (X) can be derived from GGE by excluding privatisation proceeds, lottery-financed expenditure and interest and dividend receipts. These amounted to 0.8 per cent. of GDP in 1999–2000 and in 2000–01 0.7 per cent. of GDP in 2001–02 and in 2002–03.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would the RPI indexation factor be for capital assets held over the next 10 years based on a comparable rate prevailing over the last 10 years. [36789]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The RPI indexation factor for the 10 years to February 1998 is 0.546.

Tax Relief

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual tax relief saving to the Treasury from the phasing out of retirement relief from April 2003. [36791]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: If the present retirement relief thresholds of £250,000 and £1 million applied in 2003–04 and assuming unchanged taxpayer behaviour it is estimated that the cost of retirement relief would be about £200 million.

Cross-border Shopping

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the independent report on cross-border shopping. [37982]

Dawn Primarolo: Following my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's announcement of a review of alcohol and tobacco fraud in his Budget of 2 July 1997 I asked Customs to undertake the review consulting widely with the trade, and other public bodies and interested parties.

As to the publication of the outcome of the review, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 202.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Safety

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made in the development of legislation on fire safety. [38835]

Mr. George Howarth: On 28 November, the Government published a consultation document entitled "Fire Safety Legislation for the Future", copies of which are in the Library. The consultation period closed on 28 February 1998 and between the Home Office and the Scottish Office, we have received around 450 responses.

We have decided to proceed with a thorough overhaul of fire safety legislation along the lines set out in the consultation document. However, some difficult areas such as Houses of Multiple Occupation and licensed premises need more detailed discussion and consideration before we can take a decision on them and we will need to tie in with other separate aspects. We will now work up detailed proposals in close co-operation with interested parties. Subject to clear evidence of cost effectiveness of the proposals, we will aim to legislate as early as practicable.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the European Commission has issued a letter under Article 169 of the Treaty of Rome challenging the United Kingdom's implementation of the general fire safety provisions of the European Framework Directive. [38836]

Mr. George Howarth: I can confirm that such a letter has been received from Commissioner Flynn on behalf of the Commission.

To avoid prejudicing any legal proceedings that might result, the detail of the letter and the reply to it must remain confidential between the Commission and Her Majesty's Government. However, I can say that, in broad terms, the Commission's concerns relate to the need to justify the exceptions we have made from the Fire Precautions (Workplace) Regulations 1997, (among them, one for fire certificated premises). They are also concerned that the duties placed on employers by these Regulations should fully reflect the unconditional nature of the responsibilities and obligations imposed on employers by the Framework Directive.

The Government have decided that they will take the necessary steps to address the Commission's concerns about meeting the terms of the Directive in full. Such steps should be consistent with the emerging findings of the recent consultative exercise, "Fire Safety Legislation for the Future". The steps would involve making changes to the 1997 Regulations. Officials will begin to consult interested parties immediately upon the implications of this and the best way to proceed.

Immigration

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to strengthen immigration legislation to tackle abuse of the United Kingdom's immigration control. [38843]

Mr. Straw: The Government are firmly committed to ensuring that those who seek to migrate to the United Kingdom, but have no grounds for doing so under the Immigration Rules, are prevented from coming here. We have today by Order extended the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 to Eurostar services arriving from Brussels to reduce the large numbers of inadequately documented passengers using this route over recent months.

The Order as drafted does not extend to SNCF (the operators of services from France) because of their current position under French law. But we have agreed with the French Government measures to enhance operational co-operation until a longer term solution can be found.

From 0001 hours on Friday 10 April we will require nationals of the Former Republic of Yugoslavia to obtain Direct Airside Transit Visas to come to the United Kingdom even when they intend to remain airside while in transit through the United Kingdom. We have taken this action following evidence of abuse of the Transit Without Visa concession by such nationals.

Prison Inspections

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets he has set for the interval between a prison visit being made by the Chief Inspector of Prisons and a report being published. [37452]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 546.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held in Brussels on 19 March. [38844]

Mr. Straw: I chaired the Council on behalf of the Presidency. My hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin) represented the United Kingdom. The main matters dealt with were as follows.

The Council agreed a number of 'A' points, including a Council Decision on sharing the cost of preparing film masters for the uniform format of residence permits; Council conclusions on the G8 recommendations on organised crime and terrorism, and on the G8 principles on high tech crime; instruments on the exchange of information in immigration and asylum matters and on dealing with missing persons and unidentified corpses; reports on the Europol Drugs Unit's activities for 1997 and its work programme for 1998; and rules governing certain aspects of Europol's operation, in preparation for when the Europol Convention comes into force. These rules covered the Europol computer system, receipt of information from third states and third bodies, and confidentiality for the information held by Europol.

In addition, the Council agreed as 'A' points a number of joint actions enabling Community funding of Third Pillar activity. The Odysseus programme will support training, exchanges and co-operation in the field of asylum, immigration and the crossing of external borders. The Falcone programme will support exchanges, training and co-operation in the fight against organised crime. Community funding will also be available to support projects in favour of displaced persons, asylum seekers and refugees.

The Council agreed Presidency proposals designed to improve openness and transparency in justice and home affairs, in particular by making details of proposals available more easily and earlier, providing more frequent and more detailed information for the Press, and having open debates on particular topics from time to time. A Council decision to publish a comprehensive public register of Council documents was also agreed as an 'A' Point.

The Council had a full discussion of the justice and home affairs implications of the enlargement process on the basis of a Presidency paper. The Council re-affirmed the need for Justice and Home Affairs Ministers (JHA) in the member states, and national experts, to be fully involved in the enlargement process, and underlined the importance of effective monitoring of the progress made by the applicant states in taking on and implementing the JHA acquis. Ministers agreed that enlargement should feature as a standing item on future JHA Council agendas.

The draft Convention on driving disqualification was discussed, and provisional agreement reached on the text. However, some further work is still needed on a small number of outstanding issues.

The draft Joint Action to establish a European Judicial Network was discussed. The text has now been agreed by all but one member state, which was not prepared to lift its reserve at the Council. The Presidency will pursue bilateral contacts with the member state concerned. Another Joint Action concerning participation in a criminal organisation was agreed subject to one minor reserve, and should be formally adopted shortly.

The draft Convention on mutual legal assistance in criminal matters was discussed, and considerable progress made on a number of outstanding points.

The Council received a progress report on ratification of the Europol Convention. This showed that only three member states have yet to complete the necessary procedures for ratifying the Europol Convention, and hope to do so before the end of the United Kingdom Presidency. The Council also agreed in principle to advance the date when Europol's mandate with regard to terrorism will become effective.

The Council reviewed implementation of the action plan on the influx of migrants from Iraq, taking note of a report of a recent visit by the Presidency to Turkey, which is a major country of transit for migrants.

The Council also considered the current state of negotiations on the Eurodac Convention on fingerprinting of asylum seekers. It was clear from the discussion that a number of issues remain to be resolved and that further work will be required on this important instrument.

Implementations of the Dublin Convention was also discussed. This Convention, which has only recently come into force, establishes the state responsible for deciding asylum applications. The Council took note of ongoing work to draw up a programme of action aimed at ensuring effective implementation of the convention.

Prison Population

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of prisoners are currently serving sentences for (a) cannabis offences, (b) other illegal drug offences and (c) murder; and what is the average annual cost for each category of prisoner. [38383]

Mr. George Howarth: There were 51,580 sentenced prisoners in England and Wales at the end of February 1998, including 3,190 (6 per cent.) individuals serving life sentences for murder and 7,970 (15 per cent.) serving sentences for drugs offences. Information on the numbers of prisoners serving sentences for drugs offences involving cannabis were published in "Statistics of drug seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1995 Supplementary tables", a copy of which is available in the Library. These statistics show that on 30 June 1995 (the latest available estimate) 33 per cent. of persons under sentence for drugs offences in England and Wales were held for cannabis offences.

The Prison Service does not hold information centrally on the costs of prisoners based on type of offence. The average cost of a prison place for all prisoners in the financial year 1996–97 was £24,271.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of new prisons which will need to be built in the next 20 years and of their total construction costs. [38364]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend announced on 19 June 1997 that the Government would proceed with the prison building programme to deliver 2,400 new places at four contractually managed, privately financed prisons by 1999–2000.

The Government are taking a fresh look at Prison Service spending after 1998–99, including the long-term need for new prisons, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responsibilities the Police Information Technology Organisation has for ensuring millennium compliance in all national IT and communication systems and local IT systems. [38321]

Mr. Michael: The Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO) provides national information services to all forces through the Police National Computer (PNC). The PNC is expected to be millennium compliant by early 1999.

Individual chief officers are responsible for ensuring that their local force Information Technology (IT) and communications systems continue to operate beyond the millennium. At the request of chief officers, PITO is supplying advice and guidance to forces to help them in the discharge of that responsibility.

In addition, PITO is responsible for co-ordinating the development and delivery of local IT systems under the National Strategy for Police Information Systems. Three such systems—the HOLMES 2. Custody and Case Preparation applications—will be available by March 1999. A number of forces are expected to take delivery of these applications as replacements for existing non-compliant systems.

Polling Stations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to monitor the facilities made available for the disabled to vote in the local government elections in May; [38344]

(2) what new guidelines he has issued to returning officers in relation to improving disabled access at polling stations. [38345]

Mr. George Howarth: We are developing a voluntary national standard on access to polling stations for disabled voters and guidance will be issued on this in due course. The Society of Local Authority Chief Executive Officers is also reminding its members to pay particular attention to this matter at the May local elections in the light of recent recommendations by organisations such as SCOPE. We will not, however, be carrying out a specific monitoring exercise this year.

Domestic Violence

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for offences related to domestic violence were undertaken in the last year for which figures are available. [37830]

Mr. Michael: Information collected centrally on court proceedings is not held in sufficient detail to distinguish domestic violence from other violent offences. Information held centrally on the Home Office Court Proceedings database does not record the relationship between defendant and victim. In some circumstances, this may be implicit through legislation, for instance the offence of infanticide under the Infanticide Act 1938, but this is the exception rather than the rule.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of offences connected with domestic violence were prosecuted in the West Midlands Region; and in how many cases a conviction was achieved in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [38071]

Mr. Michael: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave her on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 545.

Voluntary Sector

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 16, which of the recommendations of the Deakin Commission report he plans to implement; and if there will be any divergence from the Government response outlined in "Raising the Voltage". [36571]

Mr. Michael: The Government recognise the valuable contribution of the Deakin Commission Report to the debate about the relationship between the Government and the voluntary sector. The majority of the Report's recommendations were directed not to the Government but to others, particularly voluntary organisations themselves. The document, "Raising the Voltage", published in November 1996, was the previous Government's response to the Deakin Commission Report. It rejected a key recommendation that a 'concordat' between central Government and the voluntary sector should be drawn up, as a code of good practice, for future relations.

The conclusions of the Deakin Commission Report helped inform the policies contained in the document, "Building the Future Together", published in March 1997 by this Government when in Opposition. "Building the Future Together" proposed the establishment of a compact as a framework for future relations between Government and the voluntary sector. Policy towards the voluntary sector will be developed within that framework.

MI5

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what briefings Treasury Ministers have given on the funding of MI5; what meetings have taken place between Treasury Ministers and journalists at which MI5 was discussed; and which journalists were involved. [37671]

Mr. Straw: This is not a matter for me.

Circus Animals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 536, on circus animals, if he will list the species of the animals concerned. [37913]

Mr. George Howarth: Information held on the Home Office Court Proceedings database concerning offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. Performing Animals (Regulations) Act 1925 and the Protection of Animals Act 1934 does not identify the species involved.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the real terms change in his Department's budget between 1996–97 and 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [38286]

Mr. Straw: In real terms (at 1996–97 prices), the total budget for the Home Office and Charity Commission has increased from £6,486 million in 1996–97, to £6.525 million in 1998–99. This is an increase of £39 million or 0.6 per cent. The Home Office Annual Report 1998 (CM 3908), published on 6 April, gives further information on these budgets.

Altcourse and Parc Prisons

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the prisoners at Her Majesty's Prison Parc, Bridgend, are normally resident in England. [38287]

Ms Quin: No information is available centrally regarding the principal address of those committed to custody in England and Wales. Information provided by Parc prison shows that 18 per cent. of prisons currently held at the prison are recorded as resident in England.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the last day for which figures are available, how many and what percentage of prison places at (i) Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse and (ii) Her Majesty's Prison Parc were occupied; if he has updated his assessment of the cost incurred in respect of unused places since the prisons opened; and if he will make a statement. [38285]

Ms Quin: Altcourse prison held 631 prisons on 3 April 1998, 5 per cent. above the normal full occupancy of 600 prisoner places.

Parc prison held 753 prisoners on 3 April 1998, 5.9 per cent. (47 places) below the full occupancy figure of 800 available places payable under the contract.

For Altcourse, the total value of unoccupied places during the build-up period was £102,000, but based on recent estimates of the cost of overcrowding in local prisons, the actual cost of holding prisoners elsewhere would have been £15,000. In addition, a reduction of £142,000 against the price for places delivered on schedule was negotiated with the contractor for places used earlier than planned.

The value of unused places at Parc, from opening date to 3 April 1998, is £1.2 million. The actual cost to the Prison Service of holding the balance of prisoners elsewhere in local prisons is substantially less. Based on recent estimates of overcrowding costs in local prisons it is estimated to be £257,000.

Feltham Young Offenders Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with the Department of Education and Employment on the educational needs and funding of remand prisoners under school leaving age in Feltham Young Offenders Unit. [38145]

Ms Quin: None. Feltham provides under school leaving age remand prisoners with at least 15 hours' education per week. This equates to the hours it is required to provide, under the Young Offender Institution Rules, to convicted inmates aged younger than 17.

All education delivered in Prison Service establishments is based on a core curriculum of basic educational skills, basic Information Technology skills and life and social skills. The Prison Service is now working on a new model regime for Young Offender Institutions. This will provide a broader curriculum and more hours of education for Young Offender Institution inmates, both on remand and convicted. It will take account of the National Schools Curriculum, but will be tailored to the needs of the majority of such young offenders, whose schooling histories are usually poor.

Home Detention Curfew

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long a prisoner in receipt of a licence including a curfew condition under sections 86 and 87 of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords], as amended on report in the House of Lords, will spend in custody when sentenced to a sentence of imprisonment of (a) three months, (b) four months and (c) eight months. [38164]

Ms Quin: The sliding scale which determines the point at which prisoners may be granted a home detention curfew licence is set out in the Bill.

Prisoners sentenced to three months' imprisonment may be released after 30 days and then be subject to a home detention curfew licence until the half-way point of their sentence; prisoners sentenced to four months' imprisonment may be released after serving one quarter of that term and then be subject to a home detention curfew licence until the half-way point of their sentence; and prisoners sentenced to eight months' imprisonment may be released after serving half the term less 60 days which they will then spend subject to a home detention curfew licence.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton) of 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 465, if he will make a statement on the exceptional circumstances in which a prisoner convicted of an offence to which Part I of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 applies will be given early release from their sentences subject to a home detention curfew. [38187]

Ms Quin: In recognition of the particular type of risk posed by such offenders, my right hon. Friend has decided that prisoners who are convicted of an offence to which Part I of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 applies, should not be included on the home detention curfew scheme save where there are exceptional circumstances. Each case will be considered on its merits to determine whether there are exceptional circumstances, in the light of our overall objective of protecting the public.

CS Spray

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines exist on the decontamination of the area in the vicinity of use of CS spray. [38172]

Mr. Michael: CS spray is bio-degradable and does not require any special decontamination procedure. Normal ventilation will remove CS from the environment in approximately 45 minutes, although this might take a little longer depending upon the amount of CS spray used and the level of ventilation. Normal washing of clothing will be sufficient to remove CS from it, although sometimes it may take several washes depending upon the amount of CS used.

The Association of Chief Police Officers has issued guidance to all forces in England and Wales on this subject. As part of their training in the use of CS spray, all officers are aware that the above advice should be given to all occupants of premises or vehicles where CS spray has been used.

Data Protection Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons persons responsible for safeguarding national security need protection from the offence identified in Clause 54(5) of the Data Protection Bill [Lords] as provided for in the provisions in Clause 27(1) of that Bill. [38190]

Mr. George Howarth: Because actions taken for the purpose of safeguarding national security might otherwise be treated as criminal offences.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in respect of Clause 28(1)(c) of the Data Protection Bill [Lords], he will list examples of impositions which are similar to a tax or duty; if the provision is intended to apply to (a) council tax and (b) parking fines; and if he will make a statement. [38189] is likely to include national insurance contributions and the council tax but not fines.

Mr. George Howarth: In the Government's view

"any imposition of a similar nature"

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in respect of the Data Protection Bill [Lords], the (a) national insurance number and (b) NHS number fall within a general identifier as defined in Schedule 1, Part II, paragraph 4; and if he will make a statement. [38191]

Mr. George Howarth: The scope of the general identifier category is a matter for secondary legislation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in respect of the Data Protection Bill [Lords], he will make a statement concerning the restoration of the exemption in Clause 28(4). [38188]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are reconsidering the extent of the need for subject information and non-disclosure exemptions; and how they might best be dealt with.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last five years indicating the approximate value of each item stolen. [37979]

Mr. Straw: A list of equipment reported stolen from my Department in the last five years, with the approximate value of each item stolen is:

Volatile Substance Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with (a) retailers, (b) manufacturers, (c) local authorities, (d) police, (e) voluntary organisations and (f) other Government departments with regard to the banning of the sale of butane gas products to under 16-year-olds; [38144]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of a ban on butane gas products sales to under 16 year olds on the mortality and prevalence rates of volatile substance abuse. [38147]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are currently considering the desirability and practicality of introducing a 16 year age limit on the sales of gas lighter refills. The consultation process is at an early stage, and no full assessment of the effects of such a measure has yet been made; but Home Office officials have recently met representatives from local authorities, and have sought the views of other government departments on the proposal. Consultation with other interested bodies will take place shortly.

Criminal Investigations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal investigations have been running for longer than 12 months at the latest date for which figures are available. [38209]

Mr. Michael: There are no centrally held statistics about criminal investigations which are still in progress or which have not been resolved or concluded. It is not clear to me what purpose would be served by any such statistics.

Birds Of Prey

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 705, how many prosecutions have been mounted and convictions secured for the illegal persecution of the hen harrier since 1988. [38211]

Mr. George Howarth: Information held on the Home Office Court Proceedings database concerning offences against birds under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, does not identify the species involved.

However, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds' annual report for 1996 shows that three hen harriers were known to have been killed illegally in that year.

Pop Music and Criminal Behaviour

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission research on the effects of pop music on criminal behaviour. [38174]

Mr. Michael: I have no plans to do so. If my hon. Friend has specific concerns, I would be willing to consider any information she wishes to send to me.

Prison Education

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent educational achievements are taken into account when considering the early release of prisoners; and what plans he has to incorporate a compulsory educational element into some sentencing. [38283]

Ms Quin: The primary concern when considering the early release of offenders is risk to the public. While educational achievements in prison may suggest that an offender is making an effort to equip him/herself for life in the community, they will play only a small part in the assessment of the level of risk which early release may pose. Among the proposals in the Crime and Disorder Bill is a Detention and Training Order for juvenile offenders. One of the features of the Order is the provision for early (or late) release from custody to reflect the young person's progress against their sentence plan. The plan will be designed to prevent further offending and will include addressing the educational needs of the young offender.

Tobacco Sales

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been collected in fines from independent retailers for selling tobacco to those aged under 16 years in each year since 1979. [38307]

Mr. Michael: Information is not collected centrally by the Home Office on the amount of moneys received for fines imposed for specific offences.

The table shows the number and amount of fines imposed on offenders convicted for offences relating to the sale of tobacco to persons aged under 16.

Number of offenders fined and amount of fines for offences relating to the sale of tobacco to persons aged under 16[1], 1979–1996

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maze Prison

10. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to protect the lives of prisoners in the Maze prison. [36898]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made a statement to the House on the Narey Inquiry report on 2 April 1998.

Mr. Narey has made 59 recommendations, many of them relating to the personal security of prisoners. It is our intention to take forward as many of these as possible now that the report is published, but other recommendations require detailed consideration and project teams are being put in place to address these.

In addition my right hon. Friend has asked the Chief Inspector of Prisons, Sir David Ramsbotham, for an assessment of the regime at Maze in so far as it impacts on prisoner safety. We will consider his recommendations on receipt of the report.

Tourism

11. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the current prospects for the tourist industry in the Province. [36900]

Mr. Ingram: Given an uncertain political situation, which has a considerable impact on tourism, it is difficult to make projections for tourism revenue and numbers of visitors to Northern Ireland. However, forecasts for 1998 suggest modest growth in terms of revenue to £215 million and overall visitor numbers are anticipated to increase to 1.45 million.

"Partnership for Equality"

12. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what responses she has received to the Government's White Paper, "Partnership for Equality". [36901]

28. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what responses she has received to the Government's White Paper, "Partnership for Equality". [36917]

Mr. Worthington: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) and for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty).

Small Firms

13. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the impact the Budget proposals on small firms will have on the Northern Ireland economy. [36902]

Mr. Ingram: The budget's measures for small firms, which include a reduction in Corporation Tax rate and generous first year capital allowances will encourage growth and investment by small firms in Northern Ireland, as in the rest of the UK. They are, however, particularly welcome in Northern Ireland where small firms represent a greater proportion of the economy.

Democratically Elected Institutions

15. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what ways the proposed democratically elected institutions will differ from the district councils in Northern Ireland; which powers the Government intend to transfer to these bodies; and if she will make a statement. [36904]

Mr. Ingram: Following agreement in the talks the proposed Assembly for Northern Ireland could exercise devolved executive and legislative responsibility over at least the responsibilities of the six Northern Ireland Government Departments.

Income Support

16. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion and number of children aged under 16 years live in families receiving income support. [36905]

Mr. Worthington: The latest information available shows that 21.4 per cent., or 89,090, of children in Northern Ireland are living in families receiving income support.

Multi-party Talks

17. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to admit representatives of the Conservative party to the peace talks. [36906]

Mr. Ingram: None.

19. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in the multi-party talks in Northern Ireland. [36908]

23. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in the multi-party talks. [36912]

25. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the prospects of agreement in the multi-party talks. [36914]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. McDonnell).

Child Care

18. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the impact of the Budget proposals on child care in Northern Ireland. [36907]

Mr. Worthington: I welcome the additional assistance for families with young children which the Chancellor has announced in the Budget. I am considering how a range of affordable quality child care can be secured throughout Northern Ireland. I intend to issue a Northern Ireland child care strategy for consultation before the summer.

Irish Constitution

20. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have been held during the current peace talks on the policy of the Irish Government towards the repeal of those articles in their constitution which relate to a territorial claim over Northern Ireland. [36909]

Marjorie Mowlam: When the British and Irish Government presented their propositions on Heads of Agreement in the talks on 12 January, they confirmed that as part of any settlement they envisaged balanced constitutional change, based on commitment to the principle of consent in all its aspects, including changes to Articles 2 and 3 of the Irish Constitution as well as in British constitutional legislation. Discussions are continuing in the light of these propositions.

Grammar Schools

21. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the position of grammar schools in Northern Ireland. [36910]

Mr. Worthington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 249.

Peace Process (Referendum)

22. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what preparations she is making for a referendum on the outcome of the peace process. [36911]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It remains our firm goal to hold a referendum on May 22 1998, following agreement in the all party talks in Belfast. The necessary legislation to enable us to hold the referendum will be introduced after Easter.

Minimum Wage

24. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the Northern Ireland Economic Council's report on the minimum wage; and if she will make a statement. [36913]

27. Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the Northern Ireland Economic Council report on the minimum wage; and if she will make a statement. [36916]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Economic Council is a useful and comprehensive survey of the extent and nature of low pay in Northern Ireland. It has been submitted to the Low Pay Commission which I am sure will find it very helpful. The report shows Northern Ireland to be significantly more affected by low pay than other UK regions. The National Minimum Wage will therefore have particular importance for Northern Ireland.

Road Accidents

26. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for each year since 1988 (a) the number of road deaths, (b) the number of serious injuries on the roads and (c) the increase in traffic volumes. [36915]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Road deaths	Serious injuries	Traffic volumes (billion kilometres)
1988	178	1,969	—
1989	181	2,014	—
1990	185	1,993	—

1995	144	1,532	14.08
1996	142	1,599	14.25
1997	144	1,548	—

Surveys of traffic volume were not carried out prior to 1991. The figures for 1997 are not yet available.

Electricity Interconnector

29. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the establishment of an electricity interconnector with Scotland. [36918]

Mr. Ingram: This private sector project is principally a matter for NIE and Scottish Power. Consent for the Scottish leg of the project was granted by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, on 13 October 1997.

My noble Friend, the Minister for the Environment (Northern Ireland), announced on 26 March 1998 his decision to approve the revised outline planning application submitted by Northern Ireland Electricity plc (NIE) for the siting of the converter station at Islandmagee. This is conditional on the acceptance by NIE of the Notice of Opinion to approve the application, which will be subject to appropriate conditions.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths in each of the past nine years in Northern Ireland resulted from the use of (a) heroin, (b) temazepam, (c) cocaine/crack, (d) LSD, (e) solvents, (f) amphetamines, (g) ecstasy, (h) paracetamol, (i) co-proxamol, (j) khat, (k) alcohol, (l) tobacco and (m) cannabis. [38354]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is set out in the table. Deaths in Northern Ireland are recorded according to date of registration and not by date of occurrence. Deaths involving paracetamol and co-proxamol are not available separately being included in a wider category of "aromatic analgesics". Deaths involving tobacco are classified according to the underlying cause of death, eg lung cancer, heart disease, etc.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths of people aged over 60 years in Northern Ireland resulted from (a) over-medication, (b) suicide and (c) other misuse of medicinal drugs in each of the past 10 years. [38351]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The number of deaths of people aged over 60 years as a result of drug misuse including suicide are set out in the table. Deaths in Northern Ireland are recorded by date of registration and not by date of occurrence.

Security Forces (Collusion Allegations)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations she has received on alleged collusion between the security forces and paramilitary forces in Northern Ireland. [37887]

Mr. Ingram: Sinn Fein passed to the Government a report containing allegations of alleged collusion, which has been passed to the RUC. I also receive letters from time to time which mention allegations of collusion.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the tax incentives for companies setting up in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland. [36899]

Mr. Ingram: The competitiveness of Northern Ireland's financial incentive package and the overall attractiveness of the business opportunity, including taxation aspects, is regularly reviewed. Repeated investments in Northern Ireland by companies such as Nortel, Fujitsu and Emerson reinforce the continuing competitiveness of the Northern Ireland business opportunity.

Orange Order Parade

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons police recommendations to charge a number of Republicans for obstructing an Orange Order annual church parade at Mountfield in County Tyrone were rejected by the Director of Public Prosecutions; how many recommendations had been made; and if she will make a statement. [37819]

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

On 7 October 1997 the Royal Ulster Constabulary submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions (Northern Ireland) a police investigation file relating to 30 persons with a view to possible prosecution for offences arising out of events at Mountfield, County Tyrone on 22 June 1997. An interim direction issued to the Chief Constable on 16 October 1997 to arrange a consultation with the investigating officer and a number of police witnesses and for certain additional inquiries to be made. A second consultation was held on 18 December 1997 with investigating police and other senior officers. It was concluded that, in respect of the persons reported, the evidence was insufficient to afford a reasonable prospect of obtaining a conviction. Accordingly, a direction for no prosecution was issued to the Chief Constable on 22 December 1997.

Criminal Trials

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases between 1985 and 1995 the Attorney-General's representative was asked to present the Crown's case at a criminal trial in Northern Ireland; in what circumstances the DPP was not represented; and in what capacity Mr. Brian Kerr appeared during the trial of Mr. Brian Nelson. [37805]

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

I have taken my hon. Friend's reference to "the Attorney-General's representative" to mean senior Crown counsel appointed by the Attorney-General for Northern Ireland. Senior Crown counsel were instructed by the DPP(NI) to prosecute on three occasions during the period 1 January 1991 to 31 December 1995, the only period for which complete records are available. This includes the conduct by Mr. Brian Kerr QC (as he then was) of proceedings against Brian Nelson. When the DPP(NI) initiates, undertakes or carries on criminal proceedings, he is always represented either by counsel or professional staff.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 8 April. [37886]

Mr. Prescott: I have been asked to reply.

The Prime Minister today is in Northern Ireland where he is involved in the peace talks.

DEFENCE

Britannia

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the former Royal Yacht Britannia. [38772]

Mr. George Robertson: I have decided that Britannia should be preserved in Edinburgh, in the Port of Leith. Subject to a satisfactory conclusion to negotiations, the former Royal Yacht will be sold to an independent charitable trust being promoted by Forth Ports plc. The trust will take responsibility for the preservation of Britannia, and for running the Yacht as a visitor attraction and as a venue for conferences and other functions. Both Forth Ports and the Manchester Ship Canal Company offered very good ideas; either would have allowed Britannia to be preserved successfully and with dignity. It has been a difficult choice, but a good outcome for Britannia. I am grateful to both for having put forward such excellent proposals.

Britannia is expected to leave Portsmouth in the next few weeks, and, following essential work to adapt her to her new role, will be open to the public later this year.

Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the Key Targets set for the Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency for the Financial Year 1998–99. [38841]

Dr. Reid: The Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency has been set the following Key Targets for the Financial Year 1998–99:

Key Targets 2

Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the Key Targets set for the Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency for the Financial Year 1998–99. [38842]

Dr. Reid: The Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency has been set the following Key Targets for the Financial Year 1998–99:

Key Target 1

Key Target 2

Key Target 5

To exceed a one day improvement in receipts processing cycle times.

Key Target 6

To establish unit costs per output baseline to enable subsequent measurement of efficiency improvements.

Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets set for the Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency for the financial year 1998–99. [38776]

Dr. Reid: The Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency has been set the following key targets for the Financial Year 1998–99:

Key Target 1:

To achieve a 2 per cent. improvement in the range of postal and courier services provided.

Key Target 2:

Key Target 4:

To exceed an average 2 per cent. improvement in unit costs per output.

Defence Transport and Movements Executive

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets set for the Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive for the financial year 1998–99. [38775]

Dr. Reid: The Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive has been set the following key targets for the Financial Year 1998–99.

Key Target 1:

To exceed 90 per cent. of customers' perceived satisfaction of requirements.

Key Target 2:

To establish the baseline for the quality of the Unaccompanied Baggage Service, to enable subsequent measurement of improvements.

Key Target 3:

To exceed 90 per cent. satisfaction of customers' requirements.

Key Target 4:

To establish unit costs per output data to enable the setting of realistic efficiency targets for subsequent years.

Army Storage

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision he has made on the implementation of the recommendations in the Army's storage rationalisation study. [38839]

Dr. Reid: The consultation process on the conclusions of the Army's storage rationalisation study, which recommended the closure of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA) sub-depots at Thatcham in Berkshire and Old Dalby in Leicestershire, has now ended. A number of representations were received from the trades unions, local councils, individual employees and hon. Members. Having considered these representations very carefully, I am satisfied that no issues have arisen which would call into question the study's recommendations. I intend, therefore, to proceed to implement these recommendations with the objective of ceasing operations at the sub-depot at Old Dalby by 1 April 1999 and that at Thatcham by 1 April 2000.

Reservists

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to continue to call out reservists to support military operations. [38840]

Dr. Reid: A new call-out order has been made under Section 54 of the Reserve Forces Act 1996. This will allow us to continue calling out members of the reserve forces in support of operations in Yugoslavia and in the region of Iraq. The order will cease to have effect on 31 March 1999. All reservists called out are volunteers.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 192, what is the total acreage, excluding foreshore, of the Pendine range. [37966]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 6 April 1998]: this is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 8 April 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence and Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the area of the Pendine range.

The total acreage, excluding foreshore, of the Pendine range is 2519 acres.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list (a) the contracts awarded to COMAX by DERA, (b) the length of each contract, (c) the cost of each contract and (d) the number of staff employed on each contract; [37905]

(2) if he will list the contracts undertaken by COMAX at DERA Pendine, the number of staff employed on each contract and the cost of each contract in 1997–98 and 1998–99. [37906]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 6 April 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 8 April 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence and Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about contracts awarded to COMAX by DERA and about contracts undertaken by COMAX at DERA Pendine.

All DERA's business with Comax is awarded under a single "Umbrella Contract" which was placed on 25 April 1997. Most of the business is spread over 12 Service Level Agreements, nine of which are based on geographical regions and three of which are for pan-DERA services, as shown in the following table:

£ million

Service level agreement	Period (from 25 April 1997)	Cost
1. Farnborough Site Cluster	4 years 9 months	19.2
2. Boscombe Down Site Cluster	4 years 6 months	7.8
3. Porton Down Site Cluster	4 years	6.1
4. Fort Halstead Site Cluster	5 years	7.3
5. Chertsey Site Cluster	3 years	8.3
6. Portsdown West Site Cluster	5 years	7.0
7. Malvern Site Cluster	3 years 6 months	7.0
8. Ranges Site Cluster	4 years 3 months	10.3
9. Financial Services	5 years 3 months	7.7
10. Information Services	5 years 3 months	27.2
11. Supply Services	5 years 3 months	4.0
12. Farnborough Aerodrome	Until 31 December 2000 unless sooner terminated by DERA by 6 months notice to expire on or after 31 December 1998	3.1
Total		115

Under the same Umbrella Contract, catalogued goods and services (for example, reprographics, car hire, consumable etc) were ordered totalling £13.1M. Separate contracts were also placed totalling £5.7M. These figures cannot easily be reconciled to the SLA locations. COMAX employs circa 1300 staff under the single Umbrella Contract.

As far as DERA Pendine is concerned, COMAX provides contract services under the Service Level Agreement for the Ranges Site Cluster that covers 16 DERA ranges. The value of the Pendine element is approximately £1M. DERA has also placed a separate contract for demolition at Pendine valued at £104K. I understand that COMAX employs 14 direct staff on the Pendine site.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the central administration costs allocated to DERA Pendine (a) for 1996–97, (b) for 1997–98 and (c) projected for 1998–99; [37907]

(2) what were the total central administrative costs of DERA in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; and what are the projected costs for 1998–99. [37914]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 6 April 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 8 April 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence and Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the central administrative costs of DERA and the central administrative costs allocated to DERA Pendine.

The central administrative costs of DERA charged to business sectors are as follows:

1996/97	45.7
1998/99	37.9

These costs include corporate management functions, services provided centrally such as finance, security, health and safety, personnel, contracts, marketing, quality, intellectual property and information systems, and charges incurred centrally on behalf of the whole Agency such as insurance, subscriptions and audit fees. The costs for 1996/97 also include those for divisional management (Defence Research Agency, Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation, Protection and Life Sciences Division and Centre for Defence Analysis) which were abolished as a result of the reorganisation on 1 April 1997.

The amount of the DERA central administration charge allocated to Pendine for each year is as follows:

1996/97	258.9

The allocation in the budget for 1998/99 is £169.3K.

As well as these central administrative charges, there are additional administrative charges allocated by the Ranges Sector itself, as follows:

1996/97	103.6
1997/98	[1]142.6
1998/99	[2]213.0

[1] Based on the forecast for accounting period 11
[2] Budget

I hope that this information is helpful.

Alcoholism (Armed Forces)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on alcoholism in the armed forces; and if he will place the results in the Library. [38177]

Dr. Reid: All three Services run comprehensive education packages to combat alcohol misuse. In addition, each of the Services have in place arrangements for treating and rehabilitating those who display signs of alcohol dependency. These measures are kept under review and amended and re-focused as necessary. To this end, the individual Service authorities are free to initiate or commission research as necessary. The most recent such commission was made by the Army in late 1995 when a pilot study was undertaken by a civilian company into the use and misuse of alcohol. A fuller study was subsequently conducted by the same company during 1996–97. The study found that the incidence of problems of alcohol misuse among Army personnel was broadly similar to that experienced by an equivalent section of society of the same demographic and socio-economic make up. The report highlighted areas where improvements could be made in education and awareness and these are being addressed. The report is an internal management document and is being used in the development of alcohol policy and awareness training; the interviews on which its conclusions are based were given in confidence. There are therefore no plans to publish the report.

Military Research and Development

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those civil developments which he assesses to have resulted from Government-funded military research and development since 1990. [38332]

Mr. Spellar: The transfer of technology from military research and development into civil markets is promoted by the Ministry of Defence, in support of the wider Government objectives of increasing wealth creation within the UK industry.

An exhaustive list of civil developments resulting from Government-funded military research and development would be difficult to compile; however, recent examples include:

Uncooled infrared thermal imaging technology, which enables clear sight in total darkness or even through smoke, is now in use in helmet-mounted cameras for fire-fighters and hand-held cameras for security, law enforcement, drug interdiction, industrial thermography and wildlife protection worldwide.

Light, strong casing technology, designed for the LAW-80 antitank rocket, has been adapted for use in torus-shaped compressed air containers which are shortly to be tested by the Health and Safety Executive. These could be a major improvement over current cylindrical designs, due to their reduced weight for the same air pressure and volume.

Research into damping vibrations in military helicopters led to the discovery of a thin, flat structure with excellent sound radiation properties. This technology, which will allow flat panel loudspeakers for wall mounting or mobile public address systems, has been licensed to a civil firm for development and production.

The scope for DERA's dual use activities is under consideration, both as part of the Strategic Defence Review, and with the publications of the Defence Diversification Green Paper on 5 March 1998.

Export Organisations

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the different roles of the Defence Export Services Organisation and the Export Opportunities Service (Defence and Security). [38331]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Export Services Organisation, DESO, is a part of the Ministry of Defence. Its role is to provide British defence exporters with the best possible Government support, within the framework of our defence, security and foreign policies. This includes the following activities:

the bringing together of overseas customers and UK suppliers;

the co-ordination of industrial sales activities to provide an integrated national approach to markets;

the administration of Government to Government defence contracts;

the development, with industry of a five year strategic plan which identifies key markets and the priority campaigns within these markets;

the disposal of surplus MOD equipment;

the provision of professional military assistance in support of defence exports;

the organisation and hosting of visits to the UK by senior Government and military personnel from overseas;

the provision of advice on export project finance;

the co-ordination of MOD advice to DTI on export licence applications.

Unlike DESO, the Export Opportunities (Defence and Security) Service, EO(DS)S, is a commercial venture operated by the Defence Manufacturers Association and the Association of Police and Public Security Suppliers. Consequently, its activities do not fall within the responsibility of the MOD. However, I understand that EO(DS)S, which has been established with the support of the Department of Trade and Industry under the Sector Challenge Scheme, has a narrower role to that of DESO. It is principally concerned with the establishment of a system for the collation and dissemination of up to date market intelligence information to British industry.

While the EO(DS)S has only recently been established, the MOD will support any initiative which is aimed at assisting the British Defence industry within the framework of our defence, security and foreign policy objectives.

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35115]

Dr. Reid: Major events planned for April and May, attended by Ministers and funded by my Department are:

Date	Location	Purpose	Cost (£)
21 April	Edinburgh	3/4 Power Armament Directors Dinner	2,000
27 April	London	Visit by Norwegian Defence College	4,500

It is not, however, possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for total expenditure on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of (a) the RAF Police, (b) the Royal Naval Regulating Branch and (c) the Royal Marines Police; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [35362]

Mr. Spellar: The RAF Police produce two publications, both of which are unclassified. The Provost Parade magazine is published twice per year and has been in circulation continually since 1947. The Provost

Marshal (RAF)'s Standards Unit (PMSU) Bulletin is published quarterly and has been in circulation since 1990.

The regulating Branch Newsletter is published three times per year, is unclassified and first appeared in 1987. The Royal Marines Police do not publish a Service Police newsletter.

Ordnance Disposal School

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he received the report of the study on the possible relocation of the Ordnance Disposal School at Chattendon to the Horseshoe Barracks or an adjacent site in Shoeburyness; and when he plans to make a decision on the report. [37703]

Dr. Reid: The report is yet to be completed. I expect it to be complete and to be able to announce a decision on its recommendations before the summer recess.

Force Research Unit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many officers and soldiers were attached to the Force Research Unit; [37814]

(2) what was the annual cost of (a) the Force Research Unit and (b) its replacement in each year of their operation. [37813]

Dr. Reid: I am withholding this information under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Brian Nelson

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to the Exchequer in each year of his Department's financial arrangements with Mr. Brian Nelson. [37816]

Dr. Reid: I am withholding this information under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on access to Government Information.

NATO

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to make available further information on NATO and NATO enlargement. [38711]

Mr. George Robertson: The Government have undertaken to provide time for debates in both Houses on the proposed accession to NATO of the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland before they ratify the accession protocols, which have today been laid before the House together with explanatory memoranda. The Government have as always co-operated fully with the Defence Select Committee in its inquiry on NATO enlargement and given it access to appropriate documents. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made a statement on 9 July 1997 on the outcome of the Madrid NATO Summit and the Government have regularly responded to questions on this topic. In addition, a briefing note on the studies of the costs of NATO enlargement was placed in the Library of the House last month, and I am pleased to announce that today the Ministry of Defence has published documents and information on NATO and NATO enlargement on its World Wide Web site at http:/.www.mod.uk.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that he and his Ministers personally read the letters sent to them by hon. Members on constituency matters. [27668]

Mr. Spellar: It has been the policy of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and his Ministers to read personally, letters from hon. Members on constituency matters. Where, however, the matter is the responsibility of a Chief Executive of a Defence Agency, the letters are transferred to him to reply to the hon. Member.

Hon. Members, nevertheless, retain the right at any time to ask for a Minister to deal with the correspondence.

Devonport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the budget for the refurbishment of facilities at Devonport; and if he estimates the work will be completed within budget. [30568]

Dr. Reid: The contracted target price range for the provision of refitting and refuelling facilities for nuclear submarines at Devonport is £335 million-£359 million. The figures relate both to the refurbishment of existing facilities and the provision of new facilities for Trident submarines. Under the terms of the contract Devonport Management Limited (DML) is incentivised to keep the costs as low as possible. The project is not due to complete until early next century, but there is no reasons to suppose that it will not be completed within budget.

Gulf War Veterans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest assessment of the possible causes of Gulf War syndrome. [36278]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 6 April 1998, c. 48]: It has been brought to my notice that one sentence, relating to the further epidemiological study funded by the US Department of Defense, was ambiguous and open to misinterpretation. For convenience the full text of the answer, appropriately amended, is set out below.

Since returning from the Gulf War in 1991, some UK veterans have become ill. Many believe that this ill-health is unusual and directly related to their participation in that conflict. However, there is still no medical or scientific consensus on this subject and important research is still in progress.

The Government are funding two major epidemiological studies to investigate the health of Gulf veterans and their families. A further epidemiological study into UK Gulf veterans is being funded by the US Department of Defense. In addition, the Government are funding a programme of clinical tests on a group of randomly selected Gulf veterans and also a research programme to investigate the possible adverse health effects of the combination of vaccines and tablets which were given to British troops in the Gulf to protect them against the threat of biological and chemical warfare.

It would be premature to speculate on the possible causes of Gulf veterans' illnesses before the results of these research programmes become available. We currently expect that preliminary results from some of these studies will appear during 1999.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of radioactively-contaminated land there are on sites and bases owned or operated by his Department (a) in the UK and (b) abroad; if he will list the sites; what is being done to restore the land; and what is his estimate of the cost. [37837]

Mr. Spellar: The information required to provide the lists requested is not available. However, my Department is undertaking a programme of Land Quality Assessments (LQA) across the Defence Estate to identify contaminated land, including radioactively contaminated land. Priority is given to sites identified or being considered for disposal and sites in environmentally sensitive areas where a known threat of potential contamination exists, or is strongly suspected. Initial results from these surveys indicate that few MOD sites are affected by radioactive contamination but only some of the highest priority sites have been assessed to date.

Where radioactive contamination is identified in a LQA, the need for clean up and remediation is determined, taking into account the future use of the site, on a case by case basis. The steps required to remediate a site will depend upon the circumstances, but in all cases such work is carried out in accordance with relevant legislation. Contaminated material arising from the remediation procedure is subsequently disposed of in accordance with letters of agreement issued by the environment agencies.

Storm Shadow Missiles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 261, on Storm Shadow missiles, how many are to be procured; what proportion of the related work will be carried out in UK based facilities; and if the costs of aircraft integrated are included in the estimated programme cost. [35356]

Mr. Spellar: The quality of Storm Shadow missiles being procured is currently classified and I am therefore, withholding this information under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I have, however, asked for this position to be reviewed, and will write to the hon. Member when that review is complete. The cost of integration on Tornado and Harrier is included in the total Storm Shadow programme cost. The cost of integration on Eurofighter is included within the overall Eurofighter programme costs. The proportion of Storm Shadow related work that will be carried out in UK based facilities is equivalent to some 80 per cent. of the total contract value.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Air Safety

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of safety recommendations made over the past 10 years by his Department's Air Accidents Investigation Branch have led to changes to requirements relating to (a) procedures and (b) design. [37856]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The majority of AAIB recommendations are addressed to the Civil Aviation Authority. Although the CAA are required to report whether or not they accept a recommendation, they do not record centrally the extent to which a recommendation leads to a change in requirements. The information requested could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many United Kingdom-registered aircraft were inspected by the Federal Aviation Administration whilst in the United States of America; which airlines were involved; and what defects were found in the last year for which figures are available. [37922]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are not generally informed of FAA inspections on UK registered aircraft.

I understand that the FAA are required to carry out a minimum of one ramp check on each foreign airline operating to the US.

They are not under any obligation to inform the CAA of ramp checks carried out on UK registered aircraft, but may do so if a ramp check raises a particular issue. The CAA do not hold a central record of any such approaches from the FAA.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of safety recommendations made over the past 10 years by his Department's Air Accidents Investigation Branch have been accepted by the Civil Aviation Authority. [37855]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since 1990 the CAA has produced an Annual Progress Report to the Secretary of State on the status and progress of its responses to the Recommendations made to the Authority by the AAIB. These reports are also published and copies are available in the House of Commons library. The figures from the latest progress report are set out.

		Acceptance			Current status
	Total	Full	Partial	Not accepted	Open	Closed
1990–95	713	533(75%)	57	123	14	699
1995	41	28 (68%)	8	5	6	35
1996	40	25 (62%)	12	3	15	25
Total	794	586 (74%)	77	131	35	759

Note:
Recommendations that are still 'Open' for further action include those requiring long term investigation or research.

Piracy

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are available (a) to British seafarers to protect themselves against piracy and (b) to the Government to protect seafarers against piracy; and what plans he has for further measures. [38329]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Advice to seafarers on how to protect themselves against acts of piracy is available from:

The Piracy and Armed Robbery Merchant Shipping Notice (No. 1517) which is being revised and re-issued shortly. This gives practical advice on how to deter and deal with acts of piracy and armed robbery and will be widely disseminated throughout the industry and to seafarers.

The Marine Safety Agency's Code of Safe Working practices for Merchant Seamen which is also being revised and re-issued and includes counter piracy advice.

Information on piracy incidents is now made widely available to seafarers so that they may take appropriate counter measures and the FCO includes incident information in Travel Advice Notices.

The Government have always considered the best and most sensible way to combat the problem is through concerted international action through the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) and we will be supporting any appropriate counter piracy initiatives that are put forward there.

We have agreed to contribute financially to a series of counter piracy seminars being organised by the IMO; and are considering whether we might be able to send experts to problem areas overseas to offer advice.

The Government share the concerns of the shipping industry and seafarers and accept that piracy is a problem, particularly in some areas of the world where attacks continue and British ships and seamen are at risk. I raised this concern at the Ministerial Conference on Port State Control held in Vancouver at the end of last month and was supported by the delegates from Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Sweden, the European Commission, Norway, New Zealand, Canada and the IMO.

Environmental Decision Making

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason the UK delegation to the 10th session of the negotiations for a UN Economic Commission for Europe Convention concerning public participation in environmental decision making, held in Geneva on 3 to 6 March, did not support provisions giving the same rights for the public to participate in decisions relating to GMOs as for other proposed environmental activities; and if he will make a statement. [37249]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 1 April 1998]: The Government are committed to a policy of increased transparency and enhanced public participation in decision making in relation to the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms and, as such, supported the inclusion of a provision applying the requirements of the Convention in this context. Our current legislation has such provisions. The drafting of the Convention provision was the subject of considerable debate during the negotiations and the UK was concerned, particularly in view of our role as EU Presidency, to secure a workable provision which provides a basis for further development. For that reason, we support a proposal for the first meeting of the Convention Parties to develop the application of the Convention in this field, taking into account work under the Convention on Biological Diversity to develop a protocol on biosafety, in which the United Kingdom is playing a leading role. The provisions of the Convention will be taken into account when the EU revises its own Directive on deliberate releases to the environment later this year.

We do not, however, consider that public participation is practical in all decisions on contained use of genetically modified organisms (GMOs). There are estimated to be 20,000 contained use activities underway in GB, in about 450 notified premises. The vast majority of these (estimated to be about 95 per cent.) employ non-pathogenic organisms, such as disabled bacteria or yeasts. The remaining 5 per cent involve work with potentially harmful organisms, such as genetically modified pathogens, and work with these must all be notified to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE).

Contained use activities are typically small scale (often in volumes of 100–200 millilitres) and short lived (research projects are often of between 6 months and 3 years duration). These activities are highly controlled and contained using tried and tested methods. The Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 require that physical barriers, supplemented as necessary with biological and chemical barriers, are used to limit the contact of GMOs with the environment and the general population.

Although it would be disproportionately cumbersome to the scale, nature and large number of contained use activities to include them in the Convention, it is clearly important that information be available to the public. In addition to requiring the HSE to keep a public register of information relating to notifications of proposed activities, the legislation also has provision for disclosure of information by HSE when requested to do so.

Regional Development Agencies

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many organisations have been approached to submit nominations to the regional development agencies; if he will list them; and how the nominations will be dealt with. [37533]

Mr. Caborn: Nominations for Regional Development Agency boards have been sought from over 1500 organisations. All applications received will now be considered in accordance with the guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. I will write to my hon. Friend shortly with a full list of these organisations.

Jet Skis

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what safety regulations apply to the use of jet skis. [37376]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Jet Ski is a trade name for one of a variety of personal watercraft (PWC). There are no safety regulations which apply to the use of personal watercraft but consideration is being given to the results of consultation on ways in which the safety of such craft and other non-regulated pleasure vessels can be improved. A decision on the way forward will be made in the next few months. At the International Boatshow in January, I helped to launch the Royal Yachting Association's (RYA) Personal Watercraft User Training Initiative. The Scheme aims to encourage more users to undertake training courses run by the RYA and to raise awareness of safety issues.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations (a) his Department and (b) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority have received from the Kent Fire Service regarding proposals to replace fire crews from Kent by crews from Eurotunnel at the Channel Tunnel; [37709]

(2) if (a) his Department and (b) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority have been consulted by Eurotunnel regarding its proposal to replace fire crews from the Kent Fire Brigade with Eurotunnel fire crews at the Channel Tunnel; and if he will make a statement; [37707]

(3) if he will place in the Library copies of the correspondence between Eurotunnel and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority relating to the replacement of Kent Fire Brigade crews by Eurotunnel fire crews at the Channel Tunnel. [37708]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No proposal has been received from Eurotunnel to replace fire crews from the Kent Fire Brigade with Eurotunnel fire crews at the Channel Tunnel. If such a proposal is made, it will be considered by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority who will advise the Intergovernmental Commission. Any such correspondence between the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority and Eurotunnel is covered by Clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement of 1986.

Eurotunnel has employed a consultant, Dawsons International, to assist in conducting a review of the staffing of the First Line of Response (FLOR) teams. We understand Eurotunnel has given notice of termination to the current providers of its FLOR personnel—Kent Fire Brigade and the Sapeurs Pompiers of Calais—as a precautionary contractual measure which would take effect only if the results of the study into the staffing of FLOR teams conclude that it would be better to have directly employed labour.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 261, on what basis clause 33.3 was initially included in the Channel Tunnel Treaty. [38154]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This clause was originally included in the 1986 Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement, at the request of the Concessionaires, to protect commercially sensitive material.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions his Department has had with Central Railways about the possible construction of a freight line from the Midlands to the Channel Tunnel; [38105]

(2) what representations his Department has had from Central Railways about the possible construction of a freight line from the Midlands to the Channel Tunnel. [38106]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received a number of representations from Central Railways about this scheme. My officials have had one recent meeting with the promoters, who wished to discuss wider transport policy issues. There was no substantive discussion of Central Railways' plans.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that the renegotiation of the Channel Tunnel rail link to London includes a requirement for a continuous fast and direct through-link to Stratford, St. Pancras and the West Coast main line for both passengers and freight, and that the complete link is built as one project. [37678]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 27 March 1998, Official Report, columns 295–96, in which my right hon. Friend made it clear that the Government require the whole of the rail link to be built. Any revised proposals from London and Continental Railways and Railtrack must establish an incentive to ensure this.

The Channel Tunnel Rail Link (Stratford Station and Subsidiary Works) Order which was approved in principle by the House last year, seeks to enable direct services between the West Coast main line and Stratford and the Channel Tunnel. Following the public inquiry, the Inspector's Report is currently with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Subject to my right hon. Friend's decision concerning the making of that Order, the provision of those services would be a commercial matter for Eurostar (UK) Ltd, a subsidiary of London and Continental Railways.

Local Authority Notices

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authority section 19B notices he has lifted since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement on the lifting of such notices. [37780]

Mr. Raynsford: None. Individual applications to vary or revoke directions given under Section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 will be considered on their merit, principally their contribution to providing competitive local services.

Transport Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much public money was spent per head of population in each county on (a) public transport and (b) road repairs in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997. [37785]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available in the format requested. I will write to the right hon. Member and provide available data.

Motor Vehicle Registration Fee

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the legislative base for the £25 registration fee which is to be paid on the first registration of a motor vehicle as from 1 April. [37803]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Section 21(3) of the Vehicle Excise and Registration Act 1994 (inserted by section 19, Schedule 4, paragraph 33, of the Finance Act 1995).

Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to bring roads which do not have 40 mph or less speed limits within the provisions of the Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act 1996. [38325]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to bring roads which have a speed limit of more than 40mph within the provisions of the Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act 1996.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the budget for London Underground's current radio advertising campaign. [37857]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that they are currently running a Family Travelcard promotion on the radio, the total cost of which is £80,780.

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of whether the total cost of the proposed arrangements for the funding of London Underground set out in his oral statement of 20 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1539–42, will be greater or less than the cost of continuing public support. [38143]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We believe that our proposal for a public-private partnership will offer better value for money than continued reliance on public sector funding, and will mean that London Underground's investment needs will be addressed more quickly, and at less cost to the public purse, than would otherwise be possible. The need for ongoing subsidy, if any, will be established only when bids have been received and evaluated.

Audit Commission

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the accuracy of information supplied by local authorities to the Audit Commission; and if he will make a statement. [38112]

Mr. Raynsford: It is the responsibility of the local authority to ensure that information provided to the Audit Commission is reliable. In publishing local authority performance indicators, the Audit Commission have to rely on this information. We have no reason to doubt the accuracy of this information in the majority of cases. Indeed, more is done to confirm that the systems in place for collecting this information are sufficiently robust than for many other nationally available sources of information.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to undertake a fundamental review of the Audit Commission for Local Authorities and the National Health Service in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [38311]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Secretaries of State for Health and Wales have agreed to set up today a financial management and policy review of the Audit Commission for Local Authorities and the National Health Service in England and Wales, as part of a programme of reviews of non-departmental public bodies.

The review will be conducted in two stages. The first will be a "prior options" study focusing on whether the functions carried out by the Audit Commission are needed and, if so, whether those functions are best undertaken by the Audit Commission or some other body. Subject to the outcome of this first stage, the second stage will consist of a more detailed review of the Audit Commission's structure, funding, financial management and methods of operation.

I have appointed Paul McQuail, a retired senior civil servant in the former Department of the Environment, to lead a small team to undertake the prior options study. To oversee the review, I am establishing an Advisory Group, on which we are inviting representatives from the Audit Commission and the health and local government sectors to join representatives from central Government.

In carrying out the study it is intended that the review team will consult with a wide range of interested parties and would welcome written representations from anyone who has views on the Audit Commission and its work.

Brown-field and Green-field Sites

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what definition his Department uses of (a) brown field and (b) green field sites. [37876]

Mr. Raynsford: There is, as yet, no specific definition of 'brown field' land, but it is usually taken to mean land previously developed for urban uses, as defined for the Department's Land Use Change Statistics. These uses include residential, transport and utilities, industry and commerce, community services, previously developed vacant land and derelict land. There is also no specific definition of 'green field' land. However, it is usually interpreted as 'land not previously developed'. This includes the Land Use Change 'rural uses' categories, such as agriculture, forestry, open land, water, minerals and landfill, outdoor recreation, defence together with vacant land in urban areas that was not previously developed.

On 23 February the Government published Planning for the Communities of the Future, which contains their main proposals for how household growth should be managed through the planning system. The document committed the Government to the publication of a discussion paper on regional recycling targets, which will also look at 'brownfield/greenfield' definitional issues, before a draft revised PPG3 is issued for consultation in the summer.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the cost of decontaminating brown-field land will be met where such land is made available for housebuilding. [38386]

Angela Eagle: The cost of decontaminating brownfield land made available for housebuilding is borne by the developer in the overall costs of the development. However, it is common for the costs relating to the decontamination to have been taken into consideration in the price paid for the land.

In some circumstances, developers or purchasers of land may be able to secure assistance with the cost of decontaminating brownfield land through English Partnerships or their equivalents in Wales and Scotland. In 1997–98, the English Partnerships Investment Fund supported schemes to reclaim and/or service 1,800 hectares of vacant, derelict and contaminated land.

Rail Subsidies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the next five years the Government subsidy to be paid to (a) Railtrack and (b) each train operating company. [37919]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack receives no subsidy direct from the Government. Subsidy to the railway is paid to train operating companies. The table provides details of payments which the Government plan to make to, and receive from, each train operating company for the five years 1998–99—2002–03, at February 1997 prices.

Counterfeit Aircraft Parts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 696, how many counterfeit parts have been found on foreign-registered aircraft operating to or from the United Kingdom in the last five years. [37920]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We do not hold this information. It is the responsibility of the State of Registry of an aircraft to ensure that only approved parts are used on it.

Aircraft Inspections

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of ramp checks undertaken on (a) United Kingdom-registered aircraft and (b) foreign-registered aircraft by the Civil Aviation Authority, indicating the airlines involved and the defects found in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [37921]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer to my answer of 26 February 1998, Official Report, columns 325–26. Since then a ramp check has been carried out on an aircraft from each of the following foreign airlines: Biman, Ghana Airways, Azerbaijan Airlines and Uzbekistan Airlines.

In the 12 months to the end of March 1998 the CAA carried out 75 ramp checks on UK aircraft from the following operators:

Aeromega
Air Hanson
Alan Mann
Bristows
British Airways

British Midland Airways
Burman
Cabair
Castle Air
Cheqair
Coventry Heli Centre
Easyjet
Elite Helicopters
Fast Helicopters
Flightline
Gill Aviation
Grampian
Hi-line
Hecray
Isle of Scilly Skybus
Looporder
Lynton
Manx
Monarch
National Grid
Newquay Air
Oxford Air Services
PLM Dollar
Sabre
Sloane Helis
Solent Helicopters
Southernair
Sterling
Veritair
Virgin Atlantic
Yorks Heli Centre.

Unlike the targeted ramp checks on foreign operators, ramp checks on UK operators are part of the normal oversight process and take place on a random basis. The defects found as a result of these ramp checks could be listed only at disproportionate cost.

Motorcycle Licences

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will increase the time allowed for provisional motorcycle licence holders to pass their test, in respect of women who become pregnant before the expiry of the one year time limit. [37975]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Provisional motorcycle licences are issued with a two year validity period. A licence holder who has not passed the motorcycle test by the end of that period cannot obtain a replacement provisional motorcycle licence within the following 12 months. If there are medical or other reasons why a person would wish to suspend their learner rider status, such as pregnancy, the licence can be returned to the Driver and Vehicle Licencing Agency, so as to preserve the remainder of the validity period.

Footways

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the disability organisations which will be consulted as part of the review of guidance to local authorities on the designation of footways as shared use facilities. [37826]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 6 April 1998]: We expect to consult formally with our statutory advisers the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee along with the Joint Committee on Mobility for Partially Sighted and Blind People as well as the Joint Committee on Mobility for Disabled People.

Views will also be sought from local authorities and groups representing pedestrians and cyclists. Comments will be welcomed from all interested parties. The review process is just beginning, and detailed consultations are unlikely to be initiated before the end of this year.

Millennium Dome

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much contaminated soil has been removed from the Millennium Dome site; to which site it was moved; and what consultations took place prior to its removal. [38126]

Angela Eagle: Around 200,000 tonnes of contaminated soil from the area of the Greenwich Peninsula which is to be leased to the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has been disposed of off-site.

Contaminated soil which cannot be reused on site is disposed of at licensed landfill sites. The contractors employed by English Partnerships operating under a duty of care in the waste handling chain, are responsible for selecting the location of the landfill sites and a number of different sites have been used.

The disposal of soils which cannot be used on-site is part of the overall remediation strategy discussed and approved by both the Environment Agency and the London Borough of Greenwich, and is consistent with Government policy.

New Housing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 543, if he will lay down mandatory minimum useable floor areas for houses and flats. [38225]

Mr. Raynsford: I have no plans to do so.

Bus Employees Superannuation Trust

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Lock) of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 462, what action he proposes to take following receipt of advice from Counsel in respect of the Statement of Claim brought by the Trustee of the Bus Employees Superannuation Trust against his Department; when he proposes to take action; and if he will make a statement. [38072]

Ms Glenda Jackson: After consideration by Ministers of the advice received from Counsel, and all the relevant background, my Department will be responding to the Statement of Claim in the near future.

This is consistent with our hope that all outstanding legal matters concerning the former National Bus Company pension funds are satisfactorily resolved as soon as possible.

Noise

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulations are in place for limiting noise levels in public places with particular reference to places of entertainment. [38175]

Angela Eagle: Whilst there is no legislation setting specific noise limits for audience exposure to loud sound, employers and self employed persons are required under Section 3 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that their business activities do not expose persons not in their employment to risks to their health and safety. This would include protection against risk of damage to their hearing.

MOT Certificates

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on the procedures followed when a complaint is received alleging that a garage is issuing MoT certificates illegally; [38117]

(2) what surveillance techniques are used in investigating garages suspected of irregularities in issuing MoT test certificates; and what training surveillance operatives receive. [38118]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency, Mr. Ron Oliver, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 8 April 1998

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about procedures followed in cases of complaints alleging that garages are issuing MOT certificates illegally; and what surveillance techniques are used to investigate garages suspected of irregularities in issuing MOT certificates and what training surveillance operatives receive.

In cases where complaints are of a sufficiently detailed nature, the Inspectorate will investigate and take appropriate enforcement action against an MOT testing station. Police or Trading Standards Officers may also be involved in some cases, particularly if deception in vehicle sales is suspected. In other cases, complaints are used to target our advisory /counselling or enforcement activities. These can include a visit from a Vehicle Examiner to examine documentation or an incognito test in which a Vehicle Examiner submits a vehicle for test as a member of the public and observes the test to ensure that the correct standards are applied.

In cases where there is suspicion of irregularities, MOT testing stations may be observed from areas of public access or from surrounding premises to monitor vehicle movement and activities. The results of observations are compared with the issue of MOT certificates. The observation of vehicle movement at non-testing premises may also be linked to certificates issued from MOT testing stations. Staff involved in surveillance receive 'off the job' training on the requirements of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act and 'on the job' training involving mentoring and sharing of best practice from managers and colleagues.

The Inspectorate carries out continuous reviews of procedures for maintaining security arrangements for MOT documentation. These have included improvements in design and printing techniques to make forgery more difficult and the introduction of a stolen test certificate hotline. Reducing the market for stolen and forged test certificates is one of the objectives of the Inspectorate's MOT computerisation project which involves setting up a computer network linking all MOT testing stations (some 18,500) with a central database containing details of every vehicle tested under the MOT scheme. The project is in its early stages and is anticipated to go live in the early years of the next decade.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will propose measures to the EU Environment Council to reduce waste incineration to the same extent as the agreed reductions in landfill; and if he will make a statement. [38326]

Angela Eagle: No, I will not. The European Commission is responsible for proposing European legislation; and while Member States can encourage it to bring forward particular measures, we have no intention of doing so for a measure along the lines suggested by the hon. Member. A significant increase in capacity for incineration with energy recovery is likely to be necessary both to move towards a more sustainable waste management system and to meet the requirements of the draft landfill directive. However, we have made it clear that incineration with energy recovery needs to be considered within a framework that favours waste minimisation and recycling.

The hon. Member may wish to be aware that the European Commission is currently working up a proposal for a new draft directive on emissions from waste incineration. It will replace the existing directives on incineration of municipal waste, with which full compliance has been achieved in England and Wales, and is likely to cover a broad range of other incineration plant. We support the need for strict emission standards for incinerations and welcome the consideration being given by the Commission to detailed issues.

Motorway Service Station (Solihull)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on planning application No. 98/0259 in respect of a proposed motorway service station at Ravenshaw in Solihull. [37942]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A planning application for a motorway service area (MSA) at Junction 5 of the M42 at Ravenshaw has been submitted to Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council. The Highways Agency has been consulted and has requested a traffic impact assessment so that it can consider the effect of the proposal on the operation and safety of the motorway. This is the second recent planning application for a new MSA in this area but, whatever the merits of the individual sites, no more than one signposted MSA would be permitted on this stretch of the M42.

Planning for Communities

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations he has had with regional bodies regarding his Department's proposals on Planning for Communities. [38385]

Mr. Raynsford: In drawing up the proposals set out in the policy document "Planning for the Communities of the Future" the Department had regard to the responses to the Green Paper issued by the previous Administration on "Household Growth: Where Shall We Live?". These included responses from several of the regional planning conferences.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the impact of his Department's proposals on Planning for Communities on counties where the structure plan has already been settled. [38387]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, columns 530–31.

Recycled Land Task Force

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the membership of the taskforce, headed by Lord Rogers of Riverside, set up to look at the use of recycled land; and if he will make a statement on (a) its powers and (b) the relationship between the task force and (i) regional development agencies, (ii) Government regional offices, (iii) SERPLAN and (iv) county structure plans. [38388]

Mr. Caborn: The membership of the Task Force is currently being finalised. It will incorporate members with a range of backgrounds, including local authorities, the planning, architectural and development professions, interest groups and others with an interest in making the best use of previously developed land. The Task Force will be an advisory body, taking forward its objectives as set out in "Planning for the Communities of the Future". The role of the Government Offices for the Regions, SERPLAN and county structure plans, and the future role of Regional Development Agencies, will not be affected, although I hope that the work of the Task Force will assist these bodies in carrying out their responsibilities.

Cyclist Accidents

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many pedal cyclists aged (a) 0 to 15, (b) 16 to 59 and (c) 60 years and above have been (i) killed and (ii) seriously injured in accidents involving (1) cars, (2) goods vehicles, (3) other cyclists and (4) motorcycles in each of the last available five years. [38542]

Rate and Rent Arrears

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the figures for arrears to date in London boroughs of Hackney, Islington, Lambeth and Southwark in respect of (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge, (c) council tax and (d) rents; and what are the average figures for Inner London boroughs. [38237]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on outstanding arrears with respect to domestic rates is not available.

Information on community charge and cumulative council tax arrears for local authorities is not collected centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) regularly publish estimates for individual authorities. The information shown is provisional and relates to the position at 31 March 1997, and will be available in their Revenue Collection Statistics 1996–97 publication which is expected to be available from May 1998.

The information on rent arrears is based on information provided by the London boroughs on their Housing Subsidy Claim returns.

Average figures on community charge and council tax arrears for Inner London boroughs are not available as information has not been received from all inner London boroughs.

	Community charge[1] £000	Council tax[1] £000	Rent arrears Cumulative[1] £000	Rent arrears As a percentage of rent roll for 1996/97

[1] Comparisons of amounts of arrears can be misleading as authorities' figures reflect decisions about when to write off arrears, and the amounts of debts debited.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the annual rates of sickness absence for employees of the London boroughs of (i) Hackney, (ii) Islington, (iii) Lambeth and (iv) Southwark in each of the years 1990 to 1997; and what were the average figures for Inner London boroughs for each of these years. [38238]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not available centrally.

Tesco Planning Application

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Government Office for the South West issued an article 14 (General Development Procedure) Order in respect of the Tesco supermarket site application in Tetbury, Gloucestershire (Ref No. CT. 0547/3/R); and what timescale is envisaged for determining this order. [38320]

Mr. Caborn: An article 14 directive was issued in order to allow the Secretary of State time to consider whether the application should be referred to him for his determination and to prevent permission being granted until he has done so. No timescale has been set but the decision will be taken as quickly as possible.

Anthrax (King's Cross Station)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the presence of anthrax spores in King's Cross station, with particular reference to the implications for the proposed redevelopment of the building as part of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [38444]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Anthrax spores were found in the loft spaces over certain office buildings at King's Cross station in 1992. Railtrack undertake biannual airborne sampling tests at the station to monitor the situation and have introduced suitable safety procedures for contractors working in those areas affected. The latest tests in March 1998 found no anthrax spores present at the station. There is no planned redevelopment of King's Cross station as part of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link project.

Recycling

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to encourage the growth of United Kingdom recycling industries. [37936]

Angela Eagle: There is already a national recycling industry, based around 100 Material Recycling Facilities and a large number of reprocessors for glass, metal, plastics and paper.

The Government are committed to an increased level of recycling and are therefore keen to see an expansion of this industry.

We have introduced a number of measures to achieve this.

- an increase in the higher rate of landfill tax from £7 per tonne to £10 per tonne from April 1999;
- a review of the Packaging Regulations, to ensure that they meet their objective of doubling the recycling and recovery of packaging waste by 2001;
- publication of guidance to local authorities on revising and updating their recycling plans.

We have initiated discussions with representatives of local authorities, the waste management industry, reprocessors, manufacturers and trade associations to ascertain what further measures can be taken by both industry and Government to increase recycling.

We and colleagues in the DTI are examining the progress of the Producer Responsibility initiatives in end of life vehicles, newspapers, electrical and electronic goods, tyres, and batteries and the extent to which this initiative might be extended. Most of these sectors are also the subject of proposed EC legislation.

We shall review the waste strategy for England and Wales. A consultation paper is to be issued shortly. One of the main elements for the new strategy will be an examination of how we can improve our national performance on recycling.

Other drives will have a positive effect on the recycling industry in the longer term. As well as the continuing effect of the packaging legislation, these include: further guidance my Department will be issuing to local authorities on good practice later this year, and consideration by local authorities of joint municipal waste strategies with neighbouring authorities.

Rural Public Transport

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the assistance to public transport in rural areas announced in the Budget will be allocated to (a) the providers of bus services and (b) the operators of rail services. [38563]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Budget included provision for an additional £50 million a year across the UK for rural public transport. There is no specific provision for the operators of rail services. £45 million will be used to support additional bus services in rural areas. The rest will be made available for community-based transport schemes. Criteria will be developed to ensure a fair and comparable distribution process, and to make sure the money gets to where it is most needed.

Rights of Way (Disabled Access)

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken (a) to preserve existing rights of way which are suitable for use by the disabled and (b) to increase the number of rights of way accessible to the disabled. [38565]

Angela Eagle: My Department, through the Countryside Commission, supports the valuable work of the Fieldfare Trust in promoting access to the countryside. The rights of way network is one means by which everyone can enjoy the countryside. We commend the recently published BT Countryside for All Good Practice Guide which contains standards and guidelines on access to the countryside which take disabled people's needs into account. Local authorities, which have statutory responsibilities for rights of way, should make themselves aware of the Guide. They should also be aware of their duties and responsibilities under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

Underground Workers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what safety regulations are enforced by borough councils to protect council workers working underground, in (a) sewers (b) and other confined spaces. [38450]

Angela Eagle: The Confined Spaces Regulations 1997 are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive to protect council workers in these workplaces.

Sellafield

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for a re-evaluation of the risk calculations that underpin the current discharge authorisations at Sellafield. [38427]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency are currently considering an application to vary the discharge authorisations at Sellafield. The Agency will carry out an evaluation of risk as part of their consideration of the application.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he intends to take on the application for new discharge authorisations from Sellafield. [38582]

Angela Eagle: A number of requests have been made for the Secretary of State to call this application in for his own determination. These requests are under consideration.

Multi-screen Cinemas

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the outcome of the public inquiry held in early 1997 regarding proposed multi-screen cinema developments in Sunderland. [38584]

Mr. Raynsford: Progress is being made in considering the Inspector's report. However, some of the issues are complex and there has been a significant amount of post-inquiry correspondence which needs careful examination. A decision will be issued as soon as this process is completed.

Polling Stations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ask the Audit Commission to make access to polling stations for the disabled a local authority performance indicator. [38343]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are discussing with the Audit Commission how local authority performance indicators might be developed. We shall ensure that access for disabled persons to polling stations is included in those discussions. As required under the Local Government Act 1992, the Commission will consult widely on its proposals in the summer.

Limestone Pavement

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions for destruction of limestone pavement there have been in each of the past five years. [38394]

Angela Eagle: I am not aware of any prosecutions.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by location the number of limestone pavement orders. [38392]

Angela Eagle: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to strengthen protection of limestone pavements. [38393]

Angela Eagle: We are presently considering ways of improving the protection and management of our special sites. There is likely to be consultation later this year.

Photocopier Emissions

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to assess the possible effects upon users of continued exposure to (a) ozone emissions and (b) hazardous chemicals and pollutants produced by office (i) photocopiers and (ii) laser printers; and if he will commission research into the effects of long-term exposure to photocopiers and laser printers. [38567]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has recently reviewed in detail the scientific evidence on potential health effects of occupational exposure to ozone. The evidence was presented to the Working group on the Assessment of Toxic Chemicals (WATCH) committee, a tripartite committee of experts in occupational health, in 1995.

WATCH agreed that the lead health effect of ozone is irritation of the upper respiratory tract. Based on the results of studies in human volunteers, WATCH recommended that an Occupational Exposure Standard (OES) of 0.2 ppm (15-minute reference period) should be established in the UK for ozone. This recommendation was endorsed by ACTS (Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances). Thus, within the UK there is now an OES for ozone of 0.2 ppm (15-min reference period).

In relation to exposure to ozone from photocopier machines, short-term (i.e transient) exposures of far below 0.1 ppm occur in normal circumstances. At these levels there is no risk of development of any health effects in office workers in the vicinity of photocopier machines. However, if there is inadequate general ventilation, it has been estimated that exposures up to 0.5 ppm can occur. As long as photocopiers are situated in locations which have adequate general ventilation, ozone concentrations will remain far below the level at which there might be any risk of irritation in office workers.

HSE has issued guidance on ozone (EH38 revised, published 1996), which indicates that working with photocopy and laser printer machines is a low risk activity. As long as there is adequate general ventilation, there will be no risks to health from emissions of substances from these machines.

Photocopy toners are fine powders which have a faint plastic odour. There is an extensive body of experimental research results from studies conducted at a number of laboratories throughout the world, into the potential health effects of a range of 16 different commercial photocopy toners. This research has been evaluated within HSE. This evaluation indicates that photocopy toner dusts are lacking in any specific toxic properties.

Occupational exposure to photocopy toner dusts has been assessed by HSE. This report indicated that even under worst-case scenario conditions (a print-shop operator working continuously for 8-hours and carrying out two maintenance procedures during that time), the total exposure to respirable photocopy toner dust would only be 0.0014 mg/m3 (the term "respirable" indicates the airborne fraction which is capable of reaching the lungs).

Overall, it can be concluded that working in close proximity to photocopy machines including carrying out maintenance procedures involving changing toner cartridges etc, will carry no risks of lung damage or other effects on human health in relation to the inhalation of toner dust.

As with other forms of electrical machinery, frequent use generates heat. Thus, photocopy machines should be kept in well ventilated areas as a common sense precaution to prevent the build up of heat which might lead to discomfort in workers in close proximity to such machines.

Emissions from laser-printers are anticipated to be similar to those from photocopy machines, and hence the information provided above should be of relevance in this regard.

British Transport Police

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to amend the jurisdiction of the British Transport Police in respect of matters outside their immediate operating areas; [38419]

(2) what assessment he has made of the status of the British Transport Police following the privatisation of the railways; [38421]

(3) if he will review the powers of members of the British Transport Police when they are dealing with emergencies outside their immediate operating areas; [38420]

(4) what assessment he had made of proposals to establish a police authority for British Transport Police and for that authority to be the employer of British Transport Police officers and civilian support staff; [38422]

(5) what are the Government's plans for the future of the British Transport Police. [38424]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A working group including officials from my Department, the Home Office, the British Transport Police (BTP) and the British Railways Board has been looking into these issues. I expect the group to complete its work and make recommendations to ministers shortly. The Home Office are about to undertake a consultation process with police staff associations on a limited extension of the BTP's jurisdiction.

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons existing rail operators require a Police Service Agreement with British Transport Police in order to obtain a licence; and for what reasons no similar requirement is made of new operators. [38423]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator is not authorised to grant, without the approval of the Secretary of State, any licence (other than a network licence) which does not contain a condition requiring the licence holder to enter into an agreement approved by the Secretary of State with the British Transport Police for the provision to the licence holder of core police services.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the (a) effectiveness and (b) operational costs of the administration of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. [38543]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency in England and Wales and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency in Scotland have a duty to monitor business compliance with the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 ("the Regulations") and ensure that businesses have satisfactorily discharged their recovery and recycling obligations. The monitoring of the Regulations will be an ongoing process.

A Compliance Cost Assessment (CCA) on the effects of the Regulations on business was included in the Consultation paper on the draft Regulations which was issued by the former Department of the Environment, in July 1996. A review of the Regulations is now underway and is to be finalised around the end of May when the Advisory Committee on Packaging will submit their recommendation to my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment. A regulatory appraisal (formerly CCA) will accompany any proposals for amendment.

Environment Agency

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Government will review the legislation relating to the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency as recommended by the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution. [38774]

Mr. Meacher: I am today setting in hand a review, jointly with the Secretary of State for Scotland, the Secretary of State for Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. It will examine the legislation relating to the Environment Agency in England and Wales and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, with a view to identifying any barriers preventing the Agencies from taking an integrated approach to the environment. The Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution recommended in its nineteenth report (Cm 3165) that such a review should be carried out within three years of the Agencies' taking up their functions, in April 1996.

The terms of reference of the review are:

To investigate the possible rationalisation of the regulatory mechanisms which the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency operate, and the opportunities for integrating regulatory regimes which currently operate on a similar basis but under different legislation, so as:

- to identify any significant barriers to integration within each of the Agencies, whose removal would improve the quality of regulation by producing worthwhile improvements in environmental protection and enhancement, customer service and business efficiency,
- to establish whether such barriers could be overcome by administrative means or management action by the Agencies; and
- insofar as this is not the case, to recommend legislative changes to enable them to be removed.

The review is not intended to consider the integration of the philosophical approaches underlying the different regulatory regimes, which are often bound up with European Union legislation. Nor is the review considering integration of the Agencies themselves.

The review will be carried out by the relevant Government Departments and the Agencies. Interested bodies will be invited to contribute their views at an early stage. We envisage that the review will take about a year to complete.

Any legislative changes in England and Wales arising out of the review would be considered by Parliament. Since the results of the review will be submitted around the time of the establishment of the Scottish Parliament, it would fall to Scottish Ministers to consider whether to put corresponding proposals to the Scottish Parliament.

Private Hire Vehicles

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about London taxi fares and fees. [38778]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made an Order increasing London taxi fares by 3.67 per cent. on average with effect from Saturday 25 April 1997. The new tariff will incorporate a minimum charge of £1.40 (including a hire charge of £1.00) for the first 462 metres (505.4 yards) or 102 seconds. The rate will then be 20p for every 231 metres (252.7 yards) or 51 seconds until the fare exceeds £9.40 and 20p for each 154 metres (168.5 yards) or 34 seconds thereafter.

The Secretary of State has also approved an increase in the London taxi driver licence fee for £87.00 to £103 (for a three year licence). There will be no increase this year in the fee for a London taxi vehicle licence which has stood at £78 since 1992.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to issue a revised circular on planning and affordable housing; and if he will make a statement. [38755]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has today issued Circular 6/98: Planning and Affordable Housing, which replaces Circular 13/96. The Circular is intended to provide a clearer framework for preparing plan policies on affordable housing. It should help local planning authorities adopt a more consistent, plan-based approach, which will facilitate speedier and more effective negotiations and decisions on planning applications involving affordable housing.

The Government wish to optimise the contribution that the planning system can make to the overall supply of affordable housing. However, they also want to ensure that affordable housing policies in development plans are consistent with Government guidance and that they are consistently applied.

The new Circular lowers and further revises the existing thresholds, confirms a preference for providing affordable housing as part of the proposed development, and clarifies further the use of financial contributions in lieu of on-site provision. It also clarifies that the policy in the Circular applies to all types of new housing proposals.

The Circular revises the existing threshold arrangements so that local planning authorities should only seek an element of affordable housing in:

(a) housing developments of 25 or more dwellings or residential site of 1 hectare or more, irrespective of the number of dwellings; and

(b) in Inner London, in housing developments of 15 or more dwellings, or to residential sites of 0.5 hectare or more, irrespective of the number of dwellings.

In settlements in rural areas with a population of 3,000 or fewer, the local planning authority should adopt appropriate thresholds. The new arrangements also provide, in exceptional circumstances, for local planning authorities in those areas where the higher threshold at (a) would apply to seek to adopt a lower threshold, through the local plan process. These threshold arrangements should be based on assessments which include local needs and available supply of land for housing, and adopted only through the local plan process.

Where a local planning authority has not yet adopted its local plan or UDP it will have to have regard to Circular 6/98 in preparing its plan. However, PPG1 makes it clear that where development plans are very close to adoption at the time that new information (including guidance) becomes available, it may be preferable to adopt the plan and then start an immediate review. Therefore, in cases where plans are close to adoption (for example where a modifications stage has already been held and no further modifications on other issues are proposed by the local authority), it may be appropriate, in order to prevent further delay, for the local planning authority to adopt its plan and to prepare proposals for early alterations to the plan having regard to the policy guidance in Circular 6/98.

Local planning authorities should prepare such proposals for alterations expeditiously and agree timetables for alteration with the Government Office for the Region. In cases where local planning authorities fail to take such action promptly, the Secretary of State may well consider it appropriate to direct them to prepare alterations to their adopted development plans within a specified period.

All local planning authorities will have to take into account the policy guidance in the new Circular in determining application for planning permission.

The Government will monitor the implementation of the affordable housing policy and intend to incorporate the advice in the new Circular in the future revision of PPG3: Housing.

Single Vehicle Approval

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the arrangements for single vehicle approval due to come into effect on 1 May will be modified; and if he will make a statement. [38916]

Dr. Strang: I am laying regulations today that will amend the procedures for importing cars and light goods vehicles that have not been built (type approved) to British or European standards. The new measures, which modify those already in place, will ensure that safety and environmental standards appropriate for use in Britain are met.

The changes start to take effect from 1 May 1998. The main points are:

Safety and environmental standards appropriate to British conditions will be determined by an inspection of the vehicle's design and construction prior to first registration in Britain—"Single Vehicle Approval" (SVA).

The current definition of "personal import" will remain for the time being—ie where

(a) the vehicle has been purchased outside the United Kingdom for the personal use of the individual importing it or his dependants;

(b) the vehicle has been so used by that individual or his dependants on roads outside the UK before it is imported;

(c) the vehicle is intended solely for such personal use in the UK, and

(d) the individual importing the vehicle intends to remain in the UK for not less than twelve months from the time when application is made for a first licence for the vehicle under the Vehicle Excise and Registration Act 1994.

Vehicles up to 3 years old that are personally imported by individuals will have to pass the SVA test before they can be registered. There will be a 2 month transitional period during which individuals who have made arrangements to import vehicles under the existing personal import conditions may continue to do so.

Manufacturers and independent dealers will be able to import and sell cars and light goods vehicles from outside Europe up to a cumulative maximum total of 50 examples of any one model in any one year. In such cases, vehicles up to 10 years old will be subject to SVA.

I will consult on options for future arrangements for vehicle imports under the SVA scheme, in particular the question of numbers. This will be undertaken by 1 January 1999.

From 1 May 1998, SVA will recognise overseas approvals if they are broadly equivalent to SVA requirements.

Any motor caravan or ambulance may be imported by anyone and will not have to undergo SVA, although such vehicles (and any other light passenger car or light goods vehicle) may be volunteered for inspection. Similarly, the scheme will, from 1 May, be available to manufacturers of vehicles constructed using parts from a previously registered vehicle.

Vehicles kept by members of Visiting Forces will be exempt from SVA; they will undergo comparable inspections by the Visiting Force.

Cars that have been type-approved in Europe are not affected by these measures, nor is any vehicle that has been licensed and registered before 1 July 1998.

SVA will apply to amateur-built vehicles registered on or after 1 July 1998.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to publish the Freedom of Information Bill; and what factors underlie the length of time taken over its preparation. [38123]

Dr. David Clark: I expect to publish a draft Bill later in the year, which will continue the consultation process started with the White Paper "Your Right to Know". In the light of comments on this, a Bill will be introduced into Parliament as soon as the legislative timetable permits.

The consultation period on the White paper formally ended on 28 February, although a significant number of responses came in after this date. I am now considering the main points arising from the consultation, and how we should best take account of them in preparing the draft Bill. Naturally, the exercise has added time to the overall process, however I strongly believe that it is time well spent, since consultation is vital if we are to develop legislation which is to make a genuine and lasting contribution to opening up government.

Market Testing

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the new guidance on market testing and contracting out will be published. [38304]

Dr. David Clark: In the early summer.

Prior Options Review

Mr. Breed: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the options which will be included in the prior options review of Government agencies. [38308]

Dr. David Clark: During the prior options reviews of their Next Steps agencies and agency candidates, departments must thoroughly examine the case for abolition; privatisation; contracting-out; market testing; rationalisation or merger with other areas of government; and agency or NDPB status. All of these options are available and there is no presupposition that any outcome is more favoured than another. The decision on future status is made with the aim of achieving the most appropriate and cost effective way of carrying out the functions so as to deliver best value for money and best service.

WALES

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the steel industry in Wales. [36462]

Mr. Hain: The British Steel industry as a whole, like other parts of the manufacturing sector, is affected by the current strength of sterling. However, the Welsh steel industry, which is among the most competitive in the world is well placed to take advantage of the stable business environment which is being created by current Government policies aimed at securing low inflation and sound public finances. I am confident that it will continue to make a major contribution to the Welsh economy through exports and the provision of quality jobs.

Road Surfaces

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of road surface have been laid with (a) whisper concrete and (b) porous asphalt since 18 May 1997. [37030]

Mr. Hain: Nearly 14 miles of porous asphalt has been laid in Wales in the last five years although none since 18 May 1997.

A contract for the first "whisper concrete" carriageway has been let, to be 7.5 miles in length, which will start to be laid next month.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints his Department has received relating to landfill sites in the last three years, separately identifying those relating to health hazards. [37058]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Complaints relating to landfill sites over the last three years have been received by a number of Welsh Office Divisions. Some of these have raised concerns relating to health issues. It is not possible to identify all these representations or those which specifically raise health issues.

In the light of recent representations concerning the Nantygwyddon landfill site, my ministerial colleagues and I are considering commissioning research on levels of ill-health around landfill sites in the UK. Officials are currently considering the scientific feasibility of such a study.

Suicides (Farmers)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Wales have committed suicide in the last five years. [37457]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The number of cases among farm owners and managers registered with the Office for National Statistics as occurring in the last five calendar years was:

1994: 12
1995: 7
1996: 5
1997: 6 (provisional).

Information Technology

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money is being provided by his Department to improve IT facilities for businesses in rural areas. [37373]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Rural Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the Government intend to spend on improving public transport facilities in rural areas of Wales during the next year. [37371]

Mr. Hain: Local authorities have powers to promote public transport using the resources allocated to them. The level of support, which is a matter for local authorities, is currently running at around £18 million per annum, much of which will benefit rural areas. In addition, the Government will continue to support the provision of passenger rail services in rural areas. They have also set a budget for 1998–99 of £125,000 for the Rural Transport Innovation Grant scheme, and some £2.5 million will be made available for improved rural transport as part of the rural transport package announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to improve rural transport services; and if he will make a statement. [38128]

Mr. Hain: The Government are developing an integrated transport policy which will reflect our election Manifesto commitment to protect transport services in rural areas. The policy will be set out in a UK White Paper to be published later in the spring, together with a complementary transport policy statement for Wales. In line with the development of this policy, an additional £2.5 million is to be made available in 1998–99 for improved rural transport services in Wales, as part of the rural transport package announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement of 17 March.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to encourage the provision of bus services in rural Wales, with particular reference to Flintshire; and if he will make a statement. [38460]

Mr. Hain: Local authorities have the powers to subsidise socially necessary bus services out of the resources allocated to them. In addition, some £2.25 million will be made available in 1998–99 to improve rural bus services in Wales, including Flintshire, as part of the Bus Partnership Fund announced in the Budget by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Substance Misuse (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much Government money was spent in Gwynedd on substance misuse services and prevention in each of the last three years. [37788]

Mr. Win Griffiths: North Wales Health Authority spent £392,000(i) in 1995/96, £440,000 in 1996/97 and £468,000 in 1997/98 on substance misuse services in the area of Gwynedd unitary authority.

£142,000 was spent by Gwynedd County Council on alcohol or drug misuse in 1995/96, £25,000 by Gwynedd Unitary Authority in 1996/97 and the latest budget information suggests that the authority will have spent £64,000 on drug or alcohol misuse in 1997/98.

This excludes indirect Government expenditure on substance misuse services in Gwynedd. The Welsh Drug and Alcohol Unit for example, which is funded by the Welsh Office, provides practical and administrative support throughout Wales to those involved in combating drug and alcohol misuse. The Welsh Office also provides grant funding to organisations such as Cyngor Alcohol Information Services which is based in Conwy but provides a range of information, counselling, residential and treatment services for persons in North Wales experiencing alcohol and drug related harm.

Notes

(i) Estimate due to boundary changes.

Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he (a) has taken and (b) plans to take, (i) on a European level and (ii) on a UK level to protect the current levels of entitlement to structural fund moneys in Wales under the current review of those funds. [37834]

Mr. Hain: On 26 March I met with Commissioner Wulf Mathies in London, and strongly recommended that the Commission consider the Welsh case for retaining structural fund support post-1999. I am confident that the Commissioner appreciates the strength of our case, and that we are committed to obtaining a fair deal for Wales.

Welsh Office officials are closely involved in all aspects of the review and policy formulation, and form part of the UK delegation involved in detailed negotiations in Brussels. They are committed to ensuring that Wales continues to secure the maximum benefit from the funds after 1999.

Road Safety

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he has taken to enhance road safety in Wales. [38133]

Mr. Hain: The Government are developing a road safety strategy for Wales which will work in conjunction with the integrated transport policy.

Later this year, new road casualty reduction targets will be set for 2010. Specific measures and initiatives towards achieving the new target will be in the following broad policy areas:

vehicle safety

drink-drive

safety engineering

speed management

walking and cycling strategy driver training and testing enforcement

road safety education and publicity.

A550

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce traffic congestion on the A550 at its intersection with roads at the English border; and if he will make a statement. [38131]

Mr. Hain: Maintenance activities are currently planned to minimise traffic congestion. The use of overnight and off-peak working whenever possible together with an embargo on all but essential works during Bank and school holiday periods ensures that full road capacity is available for peak flows. Future proposals include the provision of enhanced driver information and traffic management systems with longer term proposals for capacity enhancement improvements at critical points on the network. These proposals are being assessed as part of the ongoing review of the Welsh trunk road programme. Details of the strategy for and role of the programme will be included in the report on the roads review to be published later this year.

Inward Investment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of inward investment for the year 1997. [38288]

Mr. Hain: For the 1997–98 financial year the Welsh Development Agency has recorded 128 inward investment projects which forecast 13,842 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment of over £695 million.

EU Funds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the amount of European Union funds which would be lost to Alyn and Deeside in the event of the loss of Objective 2 Status. [38289]

Mr. Hain: Alyn and Deeside does not currently meet the eligibility criteria for Objective 2 or 5(b) funding. There will therefore be no financial loss to the area under the new Objective 2 criteria post-1999.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the provision of traffic calming measures in Wales. [38132]

Mr. Hain: A number of traffic calming trials have been implemented on the Trunk Road Network and the results will be available later this year. The results will allow decisions to be made on the implementation of traffic calming elsewhere on the network.

We place strong emphasis on making residential areas safer for children and want traffic to adapt to the needs of all vulnerable road users. We are promoting a safer environment for pedestrians and cyclists by encouraging, where appropriate, traffic calming schemes, 20 mph zones, safer routes to schools and alternatives to the car.

Council House Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of council house sales receipts he has assumed for 1998–99 in Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [38292]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The level of council house sales receipts has been estimated at £14 million, net of discount to tenants, in 1998–99 for Wales. For the purpose of estimating the requirement for Housing Revenue Account Subsidy in Wales, it has been assumed that Flintshire will receive £0.4 million, net of discount, in 1998–99.

Travellers' Children

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local education authorities in Wales who applied for support to educate mobile children under section 488 of the Education Act 1996 indicating the amount granted for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [38059]

Mr. Hain: Details of the local education authorities in Wales which applied for funding under the section 488 grant scheme for the education of travellers' children—including those from the Showman's Guild—and the amount of grant awarded in 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99, are shown in the following table:

Local education grant funding in Wales between 1996–98 and 1998–99

In the case of the three joint projects shown above, grant is paid to Merthyr Tydfil, Torfaen and Wrexham as co-ordinating authorities.

Public Bodies (Female Appointments)

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to increase the number of female appointments to public bodies in Wales. [38838]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have taken a strong policy line on the appointment of women in Wales. I have set a goal of increasing the proportion of women in public appointments to over 30 per cent. by the year 2001. I have put new procedures for public appointments based on open competition and appointment on merit in place.

General practice is that appointments are now advertised publicly and widely, nominations are accepted from a variety of sources such as self nominations, professional and representative associations. I have personally ensured that all shortlists for appointments for which I am responsible include women candidates.

My Department is developing a programme with representative organisations to increase the pool of good candidates from a variety of backgrounds. As part of this programme my Department has developed proposals for innovative public appointment pilot projects. I will be making an announcement about the detail of these pilot projects in June.

Alongside of this my Department is constantly seeking ways to improve the public appointments process and to raise awareness with different representative groups of women. Greater media cover both in newspapers and the radio have already been put into place, and presentations being given to key audiences.

My policy is already seeing results with a 2 per cent. increase of women in appointments from 26 per cent. to 28 per cent. since last year.

Drugs Initiatives

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the costs of (a) anti-drugs education initiatives and (b) other drugs reduction initiatives in each of the past 14 years; and what are the expected costs of similar campaigns in each of the next five years. [38359]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on expenditure on anti-drugs education and other drug reduction initiatives in each of the past 14 years is not held centrally. Similarly, the costs of any similar campaigns in each of the next five years are unlikely to be available from a central source.

In 1997–98 the Department spent £1 million on combating drug and alcohol misuse, £500,000 of which was used to operate the Welsh Drug and Alcohol Unit, £100,000 to support Drug and Alcohol Action Teams and the remainder was used towards other drug and alcohol initiatives.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what anti-drugs education campaigns in Wales in the last 10 years resulted in a measurable reduction in drug use; how many people were involved; and over what period they were undertaken. [38360]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is not available in the form requested. However, there is evidence that anti-drugs education campaigns are effective in reducing drug misuse. For example, positive results in delaying the onset of illegal drug use were demonstrated in "Project Charlie" (Home Office report). this used multi-faceted interventions which addressed knowledge, skills and attitudes within the context of a range of background factors such as price, availability, peer pressure, curiosity, incomes, unemployment, life events etc.

In Wales we are now implementing a more multi-faceted campaign strategy which does not propose one message or concentrate on one drug. Rather, using the Strategic Prevention Action Plan launched in November and being implemented from April 1998, the campaign focuses on different target groups in a multitude of settings and incorporating the following new approaches:

- exploring relevant and appropriate messages for young people concerning health, social, legal and environmental risks;
- using up-to-date and bilingual materials which have been designed and field-tested to reflect local concerns and issues;
- proposing and supporting interventions for those who are considered 'at risk'.

Medicinal Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths of people aged over 60 years have resulted from (a) over-medication, (b) suicide and (c) other misuse of medicinal drugs in each of the past 10 years. [38353]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Drug-related Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths in each of the past nine years in Wales resulted from the use of (a) heroin, (b) temazepam, (c) cocaine/crack, (d) LSD, (e) solvents, (f) amphetamines, (g) ecstasy, (h) paracetamol, (i) co-proxamol, (j) khat, (k) alcohol, (l) tobacco and (m) cannabis. [38356]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The following table, compiled by the Office for National Statistics, shows for each of the listed substances, the number of deaths of Welsh residents occurring annually from 1993. Comparable data for earlier years could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Deaths to residents of Wales, 1993–96

[1] Number of deaths where the substance was mentioned on the death certificate. Where, for example, both heroin and cannabis are mentioned on a death certificate, the death will occur twice in the table, once under 'Heroin with other drugs' and once under 'Cannabis with other drugs'.

[2] Data are supplied by St. George's Hospital Medical School and are those deaths involving all volatile substances, including solvents.

[3] Paracetamol is one of the ingredients in co-proxamol. When ONS quantifies deaths from paracetamol, they include deaths where co-proxamol and other paracetamol compounds are mentioned on the death certificate under 'paracetamol with other drugs'. Hence this method is used here and deaths attributed to co-proxamol are also included under 'paracetamol with other drugs'.

[4] Deaths certified as due to alcoholic psychoses, alcohol dependence syndrome, non-dependent abuse of alcohol, alcoholic cardiomyopathy, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis, and toxic effects of alcohol.

[5] The Health Education Authority estimates the number of deaths of people in the UK as a result of their own smoking in 1988 as 110,000 and in 1995 as 120,000. No sub-national breakdowns are available.

Local Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many enterprise councils there are in Wales; what estimate he has made of the number of jobs they have (i) created and (ii) secured; and if he will make a statement. [38459]

Mr. Hain: There are 19 approved local enterprise agencies in Wales. The Welsh Office does not hold information on the number of jobs they have helped create or safeguard. However a recent report from Wales Enterprise Ltd. indicated that in 1996–97 the enterprise agencies had:

assisted over 2,200 new businesses to start up; provided over 26,000 counselling sessions to firms; and helped over 3,000 enterprises with the development of business plans.

The enterprise agencies in Wales are important partners within Business Connect, and as the above figures illustrate, play a very useful role in supporting new and established businesses.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to visit Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; and if he will make a statement. [38451]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have no diary commitments in Meirionnydd Nant Conwy at the moment.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper) of 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 204, (a) what undertakings were given to the four founding partners in return for their agreement to be sponsors and (b) what further sponsors have been confirmed since 24 February. [37517]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 6 April 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 59. Further sponsors will be confirmed by the New Millennium Experience Company in due course.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what areas of the design of the large scale figure for the Millennium Experience have been finalised with particular reference to (a) its load bearing qualities, (b) emergency exits, (c) point of entry and (d) the provision of lavatory facilities. [31194]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) will ensure that thorough and detailed calculations are made of the load bearing capacity of the large scale figure in the Body Zone. Load bearing capacity, entry and exit points, ventilation and visitor flow requirements are being fully taken into account as the design develops. Lavatory facilities will be situated in core service areas throughout the Dome.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make the housing being built on and around the Millennium Experience site available initially for the accommodation of visitors to the Experience. [31351]

Mr. Mandelson: There are no plans to make the housing being built on the Greenwich peninsula available for those visiting the Millennium Experience. However, there will be a number of options for those visitors requiring accommodation. London First has been working to ensure that 10,000 extra beds will be available in London by 2000. There are a number of hotels within easy reach of the Millennium Experience and a bed-and-breakfast scheme is also being organised by Greenwich Council.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what consultations he has undertaken with (a) the Royal Society and (b) the British Academy on the content of the Millennium Experience. [34790]

Mr. Mandelson: No formal consultations have taken place with either body, though I am in regular touch with the Prime Minister's Chief Scientific Adviser on the content of the Experience.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has for the use of the Welsh language in the Millennium Dome. [35131]

Mr. Mandelson: There will be many opportunities to explore the rich diversity of the culture of all parts of the United Kingdom, including Wales, both within the Dome and through the UK wide Challenge programme of events and activities.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the role of (a) photography, (b) art, (c) popular music, (d) radio and (e) television in displays in the Millennium Experience. [35212]

Mr. Mandelson: The variety, scope and nature of the individual exhibits, and of the themes they will reflect, offer opportunities for a wide range of electronic, art and other media to play a role in the Millennium Experience.

Millennium Dome (Covering)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the arrangements for seeking a new supplier for the covering of the Millennium Dome; when the previous contractor was informed of his failure; and what assessment he has made of the degree of compliance with the provisions of the EU regulations on tendering. [37692]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The original competitive tendering process, in accordance with domestic and EU public procurement requirements, invited bids for both PVC and PTFE. Following the New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC) review of its options, after the letting of the PVC contract, both Koch Hightex's and Birdair's bids for PTFE were considered and both companies were given the opportunity to reconsider their original tender price. The NMEC acted according to EU requirements throughout.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if the original contract for the covering of the Millennium Dome is still valid. [37693]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The original contract for a PVC roof covering has been terminated by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) in accordance with the terms of that contract.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if the new contractor for the covering of the Millennium Dome is on schedule with his work. [37688]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Birdair, the company putting the roof covering on the Dome, is due to complete its work by early summer. This is on schedule.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on levels of sickness in respect of workers involved in the construction of the Millennium Dome at Greenwich. [37993]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 7 April 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 78.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

High Court Judges, Birmingham

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases were tried by High Court judges in Birmingham in 1997; and how many such cases over-ran the time allocated by the Listing Department. [37935]

Mr. Hoon: High Court judges sitting at Birmingham Crown Court heard 163 guilty pleas and 73 trials during 1997. Time estimates are agreed between the judge and the parties. Figures on the number of those cases over-running are not collated and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many receptions have been held in his Department since he took office; how many people have attended; and what was the total cost of these events. [25145]

Mr. Hoon: Since 1 May 1997, Ministers in the Lord Chancellor's Department have hosted four receptions. These events were attended by 924 people at a cost of £12,029.20.

Of this sum £10,638.94 was spent on an annual event which was attended by 830 people and which the serving Lord Chancellor hosts as head of the judiciary. The figure for the previous year was £10,099,26.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Balkan States

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visits to (a) Serbia, (b) Macedonia and (c) Albania; what assessment he made of the Albanian government's cooperation with the IMF and World Bank; and what representations he made regarding the treatment of Albanians in Kosovo and the Albanian minority in Macedonia. [31960]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I visited (a) the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on 1–2 February, where I met FRY Foreign Minister Jovanovic and the Montenegrin President Djukanovic; (b) the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia on 2–4 February, where I met President Gligorov, Prime Minister Crvenkovski, Foreign Minister Handziski and opposition leaders, and chaired an EU Political Dialogue meeting with the FYROM

Government; and (c) Albania on 4–5 February, where I held meetings with Prime Minister Nano, Foreign Minister Milo and the opposition leader Dr. Berisha.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited the FRY on 5 March in his capacity as Presidency of the EU and met FRY President Milosevic and Foreign Minister Jovanovic.

I made a further visit to the region on 11 March as EU Presidency Special Representative. I visited (a) the FRY where I met Serbian President Milutinovic and FRY Foreign Minister Jovanovic; (b) the FYROM where I again met President Gligorov, Prime Minister Crvenkovski and Foreign Minister Handziski; and (c) Albania where I met Foreign Minister Milo and the Minister of State at the Prime Ministry Islami.

The Albanian Government are implementing an emergency package agreed with the IMF to restructure Government finances. The pyramid schemes are being wound down under the auspices of a World Bank Trust Fund.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in his meetings in Belgrade expressed the EU's clear condemnation of the Serbian Police actions in Kosovo which had resulted in the deaths of a number of civilians, including women and children. He urged all sides in the dispute to exercise restraint and refrain from further violence. During my own visit to Belgrade on 11 March I reiterated the EU's deep concern with the situation in Kosovo. In Tirana and Skopje I listened to the concerns of the Albanian and FYROM governments and welcomed their support for a peaceful resolution of the Kosovo issue.

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35119]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary hosted a Dinner for ASEM Foreign Minister at Lancaster House on 2 April at a cost of approximately £3,000. Other events planned for the next two months include lunch on 29 April for the Gulf Co-operation Council Meeting (estimated cost £1,200) and on 30 April a lunch with businessman to foster trade with Latin America (estimated cost £300). It is not, however, possible to provide a comprehensive estimate on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Military Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the first annual report into military exports will be published; and what areas it will cover. [38116]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Work is in hand on an annual report on the state of the UK's strategic export controls and their application, and an announcement will be made in due course.

Diplomats' Children (Education)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for the most recent year for which figures are available, the number of pupils, whose parents/guardians are employed by the diplomatic service, attending private schools at public expense; and if he will list in order of number of pupils attending the schools involved. [37944]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are at present 610 children of employees of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office attending private schools in the United Kingdom at public expense in order to provide them with continuity of education. A list of the schools in question and the number of pupils attending them follows.

There are 1,005 children resident with staff who are on overseas postings. 166 of these children are in the pre-school age range of three to four years. The remaining 839 are of school age.

Overseas, staff are encouraged where possible to use the State Education System in the country where they are posted. However where there is no suitable state school these children will attend private International schools who charge fees on an annual or termly basis. Since this is a matter of parental choice at post, we are unable to provide a list of the private schools abroad with the numbers of children attending each one without incurring disproportionate cost.

Kenya

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he made of progress towards (a) multi-party democracy and (b) protection of human rights in Kenya (i) prior to and (ii) since the Kenyan elections in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [37985]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: (a) Following pressure, both internal and from the UK and other donors, the Kenyan Parliament approved reforms in late 1997, which among other things allowed 26 parties to stand in the elections in December 1997. The EU statement of 6 January made the point that these elections were a further step towards greater democracy but noted that there were still shortcomings. The results are still being contested. Ten parties are represented in the new Parliament. On 2 April, the Attorney-General announced a cross-party Committee to take forward the constitutional review process. We welcome efforts to ensure that this process remains broad-based and inclusive.

(b) We receive reports from a variety of sources about human rights in Kenya. We are particularly concerned about evidence of persistent police brutality, torture and extra-judicial killings. The Kenyan Government are bound under international obligations to make progress in this respect. We will play a full part in ensuring that pressure for such progress is maintained, including ratification of the UN Convention Against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Afghanistan

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to raise concerns over the rights of women with the Government of Afghanistan. [38330]

Mr. Fatchett: There is no authoritative government in Afghanistan. We have urged the Afghan factions to respect human rights, particularly those of women and girls.

At our instigation, a new EU Common Position on Afghanistan was adopted on 26 January 1998. It states that the Afghan factions should end discriminatory policies and recognise, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of men and women, including access to education and health facilities, employment outside the home, personal security and freedom from intimidation and harassment. It also ensures that support goes only to aid programmes which actively attempt to promote the equitable participation of both men and women. The EU Common Position was communicated to the Taliban and the other factions in early February.

International Criminal Court

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the procedure for reviewing prosecutions in cases where the International Court claims responsibility for determining the national location of a trial. [38314]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 April 1998]: The Treaty establishing the International Criminal Court is still being negotiated. There is no proposal that the Court should have the power to determine the location of trials other than those it conducts itself. We believe that the Court should have jurisdiction only in situations where national legal systems are unable or unwilling to act.

Gibraltar

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the arrangements for ministerial responsibilities in his Department for Gibraltar following the recent review of dependent territories. [38771]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear in his speech to the Dependent Territories Association on 4 February, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, is the Minister in the FCO with overall responsibility for the United Kingdom Overseas Territories. As Gibraltar is the only Overseas Territory within the EU, the bulk of the work on Gibraltar will continue to be handled by the European Departments reporting directly to me. However, my noble Friend Baroness Symons will be responsible for generic Overseas Territory issues which affect Gibraltar.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy concerning the situation of Moroccan workers originally invited to Gibraltar to work for the Ministry of Defence and subsequently made redundant. [38535]

Mr. Doug Henderson: All Moroccan workers employed by the Ministry of Defence in Gibraltar and subsequently made redundant were entitled to redundancy packages on the same terms as colleagues recruited in Gibraltar itself.

EU Funds

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria used in determining those projects eligible for receipt of European Communities moneys under the Kaleidoscope Project; what projects are in receipt of funds in the United Kingdom for the promotion of the concept of a common European heritage; and what part his Department plays in the determination of such. [36968]

Mr. Fisher: I have been asked to reply.

The criteria used to determine EC funding under the Kaleidoscope project are set out in the Official Journal of the European Communities, 19.8.97, C253/4–7. There is no funding under this project specifically for the promotion of the concept of a common European heritage; Kaleidoscope supports events and cultural projects carried out in partnerships or in networks of organisations from at least three Member States involving creative work for display or performance, or intended to help or promote cultural exchanges and public access, as well as larger projects with a European dimension. A representative of my Department sits on the Kaleidoscope management committee, which co-operates with the Commission in deciding on which projects to fund.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria used in determining those projects which are eligible for receipt of European Communities moneys under B3–2003, European Cultural Development Policy; what projects are in receipt of funds in the United Kingdom for raising the profile of the European Union; and what part his Department plays in the determination of such. [36967]

Mr. Fisher: I have been asked to reply.

The criteria used to determine EC funding under budget line B3–2003 are set out in the Official Journal of the European Communities, 10.1.98, C6/18–20. There are no projects under this line for raising the profile of the European Union; this funding supports cultural and artistic projects with a European dimension, projects to enhance public awareness and give wider access to the cultural heritage, European co-operation projects carried out through networks or in partnership, and European umbrella organisations active in the arts, culture and the cultural heritage. My Department plays no part in decisions under this line.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the purpose of consumer measures funded from European Communities budget line B5–100; if he will list the measures supported in the United Kingdom in 1997; and what was the role of his Department in the determination of such. [36953]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

The purpose of budget line B5–100 is to fund European Commission activities which support and supplement the policy pursued by Member States to protect the health, safety and economic interests of consumers and to provide adequate information to them, in accordance with Article 129a of the Treaty. UK bodies bid for Commission funding for specific projects. We do not yet have details of projects funded in the UK in 1997. It is for the Commission to determine how to allocate funds within budget line B5–100 in accordance with Community rules.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the purpose of information and training measures for workers' organisations funded from European Communities budget line B3–4002; which United Kingdom organisations were so funded in 1997; and what was the role of his Department in the determination of such. [36954]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

Budget line B3–4002 is intended to cover information and training measures for workers' organisations in connection with the implementation of Community action on the social dimension of the internal market.

I understand from the Commission, who have sole responsibility for the allocation of funds under this EU budget line, that the only UK organisation which was funded under it in 1997 was the Amalgamated Engineering and Electrical Union.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the expenditure under European Communities budget line B3–1010, Youth for Europe; which organisations received funding for 1997 in the United Kingdom; what criteria determine which organisations receive awards; and what role his Department played in determining the awards. [36964]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

Youth for Europe III is a European action programme which was agreed in 1995 and will run until the end of 1999. Copies of a list of the UK organisations that received funding in 1997 have been placed in the Library. In the UK, grants are awarded by the Youth Exchange Centre, the national agency for Youth for Europe III, according to published criteria. The criteria cover eligible countries, the age range of participants, group size, programme content and the duration of exchanges. The Government part-fund the Youth Exchange Centre but play no direct part in determining the awards.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the expenditure of European Communities budget line B3–1000, Preparatory Measures for Reinforcing Cooperation in the Field of Education; which organisations received funding for 1997; what is the purpose of the meeting of the Parliaments Representing the Youth of Europe; who selects the United Kingdom representatives; and what role his Department played in determining the awards. [36950]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

Expenditure under B3–1000 of the General Budget of the European Union, "Preparatory measures for reinforcing co-operation in the field of education", is administered by the European Commission without reference to the EC Council of Ministers or to the Member States. One of the organisations that the Commission supports under this budget line is the European Youth Parliament (EYP). EYP currently receives an annual grant of £65,000, supplemented by private and local government sponsorship. The Government play no part in determining awards, or in the selection of participants.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria used in determining what projects are eligible for receipt of European Communities moneys under the Raphael project; which projects are in receipt of funds in the United Kingdom; what part his Department plays in the determination of such projects; and how much is available for support of Europe Day in the United Kingdom. [36951]

Mr. Fisher: I have been asked to reply.

Decision No. 2228/97 established the criteria for the Raphael programme and was published in the Official Journal (OJ) of the European Communities L305/31 of 8 November 1997. The criteria for the calls for proposals for 1997 were published in OJ C219 of 18 July 1997. Two officials from my Department represent the UK on the Raphael management committee. Projects must involve partners from two or more Member States and are selected by the European Commission, after consultations with a panel of internationally renowned independent experts. There has been no funding under Raphael for the support of Europe Day in the UK. A list of the 1997 project partnerships which have been funded and include UK partners, is as follows:

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects which received funding in the United Kingdom in 1997 under European Communities budget line B5–300, Strategic Implementing Measures; and what was the role of his Department in the determination of which projects received funding. [36959]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

This Department, along with others which have specific policy or sectoral responsibilities, contribute to discussions with the European Commission on proposals for expenditure on Internal Market measures. It is for the Commission to allocate funds within this budget line, in accordance with Community rules. The Commission does not publish a list of measures supported in individual Member States.

Electro-shock Batons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell of 1 July 1997 concerning electro-shock batons. [28999]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The matters to which the hon Gentleman referred in his original letter involved a number of issues which have required detailed investigation. I expect to reply shortly after Parliament reassembles following the Easter Recess.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Class Sizes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what circumstances school standard numbers may be set on the basis of class sizes of over 30 in respect of those age ranges for which the Government have set targets for class sizes below 30. [37511]

Ms Estelle Morris: Standard numbers are set on the basis of the capacity of the school as a whole. The organisation of pupils within a school is a matter for LEAs, governors and headteachers. This may mean that a school is able to adapt to class size policy without needing a reduction in standard number. The measures we are taking in the School Standards and Framework Bill will require each Authority to produce a statement setting out how they intend to implement limits on class sizes including the need for any variation to standard numbers. The Bill also provides that in deciding a proposal to reduce the standard number at a primary school the School Organisation Committee shall have regard to any limits imposed on class sizes. It further provides for the Secretary of State to suspend for a specified period the requirement to recruit up to the standard number for the purpose of enabling any limit on class sizes to be met.

Failing Schools

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools have been designated as failing schools in the last (a) four and (b) five years, in each LEA area. [37680]

Mr. Byers: The following table lists the number of schools found to be failing by LEA area over the past 4 and 5 years to 31 March 1998. The table also shows the number of schools which have been closed or which no longer require special measures within the LEA area.

Undergraduates

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the numbers of full-time and sandwich undergraduates by socio-economic groups A to E in (i) 1985, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1995. [37548]

Dr. Howells: The data held centrally on full-time undergraduate students by social classes A to E is provided in the following table. It shows the numbers of accepted applicants to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses who apply through the admissions services for universities and colleges; however not all full-time undergraduate students enter through these services.

[2] The classification system to assign social class to applicants is that used in the National Census--the Standard Occupational Classification published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. (A), (B), (C1), (C2), (D), (E) are the institute of practitioners in advertising (IPA) equivalent definition of social class.

Celebrating Europe Competition

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools have submitted entrants for the Celebrating Europe competition; and how many prizes are available. [36957]

Dr. Howells: 312 schools in the United Kingdom submitted entries for the Celebrating Europe competition. 10 awards with a value of £5,000 each are available to the winners, six of which are for primary, secondary and special schools and four for colleges and youth organisations. There will also be some runners-up awards.

Schools (New Books)

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many schools have not taken up their entitlement under the scheme to provide £1,000 for new books which he announced on 29 January; [37701]

(2) what is his current estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the scheme to provide £1,000 for each school for new books which he announced on 29 January. [37702]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 7 April 1998]: The total grant available for new books in 1997–98 was £23m, including £1m for grant-maintained schools, found from savings with existing Departmental budgets. LEA-maintained schools have received grant through the Standards Fund, paid via their LEA. So far 97 per cent. of the Standards Fund grant offered has been claimed by authorities. The final figure for take up will be known in the autumn. The Funding Agency for Schools has allocated the £1m for GM schools. Expenditure figures for individual schools are not held centrally.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects the Equal Opportunities Commission review to be complete. [36847]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We understand the EOC are hoping to submit its recommendations to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, this summer.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 18 February 1998, Official Report, column 741, which three of the four proposals were part of the draft of the Green Paper on special educational needs when it was presented to the National Advisory Group on 2 September; which was generated by the Advisory Group itself; and if the three proposals in the pre-2 September draft were included at the insistence of the Audit Commission. [37384]

Ms Estelle Morris: All papers of the National Advisory Group on Special Educational Needs (SEN), including the draft Green Paper considered by the Group on 2 September 1997, are confidential. I am however currently considering whether both the notes of meetings and papers of the Group might generally be published in future.

The Audit Commission has at no stage made representations in relation to the SEN Green Paper. The proposals on which we consulted were options for making progress towards the objectives set out in the Labour Party's consultation paper of March 1997, "Every Child is Special".

Higher Education

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his oral statement of 16 March 1998, Official Report, column 962, what was the source of the statistics on participation in higher education in various constituencies. [37549]

Dr. Howells: The data quoted by the Secretary of State on 16 March was derived from the 1991 Census and was published by the Office for National Statistics in the "New Parliamentary Constituency Monitor" series. These do not measure participation in higher education; these data show the proportion of people with higher education qualifications in each constituency. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Dyslexia

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if his Department (i) maintains and (ii) requires local education authorities to maintain a register of approved providers for the teaching of dyslexics. [37343]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department maintains a list of non-maintained special schools and independent schools approved as suitable for children with special education needs. The Council for the Registration of Schools Teaching Dyslexia (CReSTeD) maintains a register of schools that help dyslexic children. The majority of children with dyslexia will be educated in their local maintained school with appropriate additional support.

Education Reform Booklet

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish a booklet for parents relating to education reforms introduced since 1 May 1997. [37465]

Mr. Byers: We have yet to take final decisions on the details of the Department's advertising and publicity strategy for the year ahead. But we certainly intend to reflect in it the importance of helping parents to take decisions about the education of their children and to work in partnership with schools.

New Deal (Stoke-on-Trent)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from (i) employers, (ii) trades unions, (iii) non-Governmental groups and (iv) individuals in Stoke-on-Trent, North in respect of the New Deal. [37195]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employment Service have worked closely with a very wide range of partners to deliver New Deal in Stoke-on-Trent as elsewhere. Discussions have taken place with employers, trade unions, local authorities, voluntary organisations, other non-governmental groups and individuals.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of people in the Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency who are eligible for the New Deal for (i) 18–24 year olds, (ii) lone parents, (iii) people with a disability or long-term illness and (iv) adults over 25 years who have been unemployed for two years or more; and if he will make a statement. [37192]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have placed in the Library a list of the client planning assumptions for each New Deal unit of delivery which the Employment Service is using to plan provision for young unemployed people aged 18 to 24. The table shows that the planning assumptions for the Staffordshire unit of delivery, which includes the Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency, is that 3,530 young people could be eligible to join the New Deal in 1998–99. We have yet to finalise planning assumptions for participation in the other New Deal groups.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) interviews with unemployed young people have been completed, (b) jobs have been pledged and (c) employers have signed up to the new deal in Stoke-on-Trent North. [37194]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal in the Staffordshire unit of delivery, which includes Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency, does not start until 6 April. As a result no interviews have yet taken place. Employers have backed New Deal in Staffordshire as they have throughout the country, and pledges and Employer Agreements will follow as New Deal gets under way.

Environmental Task Force

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many non-Governmental groups have expressed an interest in participating in the Environment Task Force within Stoke-on-Trent, North to date. [37191]

Mr. Andrew Smith: North Staffordshire Training and Enterprise Council have formed a consortium to deliver the Environment Task Force option in the North Staffordshire area. Nine voluntary organisations are involved in the consortium which may offer projects in the Stoke-on-Trent, North area and there are five other organisations whose involvement is under consideration.

Employment Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the training available to Employment Service staff to equip them to operate the New Deal from 6 April. [37193]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In all, the Employment Service (ES) expects to deliver over 50,000 training days to equip its staff to operate New Deal in addition to established training provision. The main recipients of training will be ES New Deal Personal Advisers but a variety of other training is taking place including coverage of marketing, vacancy taking, team leadership and processes.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 201, on Welfare to Work, when he expects the results of the first year pilots to be completed; if they will be made publicly available; and if he will make a statement. [34445]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 13 March 1998]: We expect that the first results of the pilots starting in October this year will be available by end of 1999. As part of the New Deal for Disabled People we will also be developing a programme of research and evaluation to increase our understanding of the client group and to determine the effect of our initiatives. The results of the research will be made available to all those with an interest in promoting employment opportunities for disabled people and people with long-term health problems. This is in keeping with the Government's continuing policy of openness.

National Disability Development Initiative

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many projects have been funded under the National Disability Development Initiative; how many have started; and what monitoring and evaluation is taking place. [36351]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Jim Fitzpatrick, dated 8 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of projects which have been funded under the National Disability Development Initiative; how many have started; and what monitoring and evaluation is taking place. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

I regret that I am unable to provide you with exactly the information you have requested as currently no contracts have been awarded under the National Disability Development Initiative. However, I can confirm that nine preferred tenders have been selected by the National Disability Development Initiative Board, and that contract negotiations are at an advanced stage. I can also confirm that the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Employment and Equal Opportunities hopes to make an announcement about the successful projects towards the end of April.

I hope this is helpful.

New Deal

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people are eligible to sign up to the New Deal; how many people have signed up to the New Deal; how many businesses have signed up to support the New Deal; and what is the New Deal's total investment in the South West Hertfordshire constituency. [38342]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 7 April 1998]: I have placed in the Library a list of the client volume planning assumptions for each New Deal unit of delivery which the Employment Service is using to plan provision for young people aged 18 to 24. The table shows that the planning assumption for Hertfordshire unit of delivery, which includes the South-West Hertfordshire constituency, is that 1585 young people could be eligible to join the New Deal in 1998–99.

In Hertfordshire unit of delivery 460 clients have been invited to enter the Gateway.

To date, more than 4,500 employers have signed nationally of which 42 are in this delivery unit. This number will rise significantly as New Deal is fully operational in this area from 6 April.

It is not possible to state exactly the total investment in New Deal in the area as New Deal is a client led initiative and sufficient funds will be made available to meet the needs of all those eligible.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people are eligible to sign up to the New Deal; how many businesses have signed up to support the New Deal; and what is the New Deal's total investment in the Hexham constituency. [38166]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have placed in the Library a list of the client volume planning assumptions for each New Deal unit of delivery which the Employment Service is using to plan provision for young people aged 18 to 24. The table shows that the planning assumption for Northumberland unit of delivery, which includes the Hexham constituency, is that 1,588 young people could be eligible to join the New Deal in 1998–99.

To date, more than 4,500 employers have signed nationally of which 7 are in this delivery unit. This number will rise significantly as New Deal is operational in this area from 6 April.

It is not possible to state exactly the total investment in New Deal in the area as New Deal is a client-led initiative and sufficient funds will be made available to meet the needs of all those eligible.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in the constituency of Wellingborough will be eligible for assistance through the New Deal in the current financial year. [36435]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have placed in the Library a list of the client volume planning assumptions for each New Deal unit of delivery which the Employment Service is using to plan provision for young unemployed people aged 18 to 24. The table shows that the planning assumption for the Northamptonshire unit of delivery, which includes the Wellingborough constituency, is that, 1968 young people could be eligible join the New Deal in 1998–99.

Disabled People

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women are registered disabled in England and Wales. [36581]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 repealed the registration provisions of the 1944 Disabled Persons (Employment) Act. Access to the programmes offered by my Department for people with disabilities does not depend on any process of registration.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the indicators that will be used to measure the targets for (a) an increase in the number of disabled people able to work and (b) a reduction in discrimination against disabled people as proposed in the green paper. [37995]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Setting out proposed success measures and inviting debate on them is an unprecedented break with the past and a key step forward. The Government have phrased them in broad terms initially to generate a wide debate. We would welcome views on how they should be refined.

Departmental Staff (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located; [36626]

(2) how many staff are employed in Scotland by executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36628]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 8 April 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions regarding the number of staff employed in Scotland by his Department, or Executive Agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

I can confirm that the only Department for Education and Employment staff employed in Scotland are staff from the Employment Service. These staff are spread across 130 Jobcentres, 15 District Offices and our Office for Scotland.

I attach a breakdown of the number of staff per District and the number of staff working within the Employment Service Office for Scotland.

I hope this is helpful.

School Standards

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is his Department's calculation of the proportion of all maintained schools with 15-year-old pupils first inspected in each school year from 1993–94 to 1996–97 that had statistically significant greater point increases in their pupils' average total GCSE point scores compared with their average in the school year immediately preceding that of their inspection than the national average point increase for all maintained schools with 15-year-old pupils for the same corresponding periods by (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996 and (d) 1997, as applicable, and for each annual group of schools and each period, what was the average total point score of all their pupils for each school year from that immediately preceding that of inspection to 1997; what were the average point increases in all their pupils' scores for each of the four periods as applicable; how many schools there were in each group and what were their total number of 15-year-old pupils in each of the five years involved; and what was the national average GCSE point increase for all maintained schools with 15-year-old pupils in each of the (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1993 to 1995, (iii) 1993 to 1996 and (iv) 1993 to 1997, with all point scores stated to one decimal place; [27301]

(5) for all those maintained primary schools with Year 6 pupils that had not been inspected by Ofsted for the first time since 1 September 1992 in each school year (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97, what is his Department's calculation of the averages of the joint total English, maths, and science national Key Stage 2 SAT test point scores, stated to one decimal place, of all the pupils in each of these annual groups of schools for each school year from 1994–95 to 1996–97, as applicable, when each pupil's subject score is calculated by awarding the same number of points as the National Curriculum level attained; and what were the total numbers of schools in each group and of all their Year 6 pupils in each year since 1993–94 inclusive; [27305]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1998 and 3 February 1998]: The information is shown in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

School Exclusions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the recent Audit Commission report on children who are excluded from school. [38185]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Audit Commission report, "Misspent Youth", noted that a significant proportion of juvenile offenders had been excluded from school. We believe that the figures for permanent exclusions from schools are too high and are reviewing our approach to this issue in the light of the Education and Employment Select Committee's report, "Disaffected Children (Fifth Report, 1997–98)" and the forthcoming report of the Social Exclusion Unit.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the level of school exclusions in the West Midlands. [38184]

Ms Estelle Morris: None.

Early Years Development Plans

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to announce funding for Early Years Development Plans. [38777]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Allocations are being announced this week. 120 LEAs and their partners will receive funding totalling £6 million for a wide range of projects to create additional childcare places for pre-school children and 4-year-olds in full-time education.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Selective Assistance

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 4 March 1998, Official Report, column 638, if she will make a statement on the cost per job limits on regional selective assistance imposed by the Government indicating any (a) regional variations and (b) variations according to development area status. [38227]

Mrs. Roche: Cost per job is a useful means of assessing value for money against the objective of the RSA scheme to create or safeguard jobs. Each case is judged on its merits and there is no fixed rate of grant per job. The cost per job ceiling is higher in Development Areas than Intermediate Areas.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 235, if she will list the average levels of regional selective assistance by region for (a) full and (b) intermediate development areas as a percentage of the project's capital cost. [38210]

Mrs. Roche: This information is provided in the Industrial Development Act 1982 Annual Report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many exceptions were made in 1997 to cost per job limits on regional selective assistance; and if she will list these exceptions. [38228]

Mrs. Roche: One exception was made for a project by the Rover Group to build a new engine plant in the West Midlands.

Airlines (Predatory Pricing)

Mr. Love: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to investigate the use of predatory pricing in the airlines industry; and if she will make a statement. [38376]

Mrs. Beckett: Under UK competition legislation, the Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for investigating allegations of anti-competitive and monopolistic behaviour.

In addition, if the behaviour fell under EC competition law, the Competition Directorate of the European Commission has the powers to gather the information necessary to assess a given case, and to terminate any infringements.

Complaints about alleged anti-competitive practices should therefore be forwarded to the Director General or the European Commission as the case may be.

Spammers

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on action against junk E-mailers, known as spammers. [37579]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The EU Telecommunications Data Protection Directive, which must be implemented by October this year, provides protection from unsolicited calls for direct marketing purposes. The Government will be consulting on the implementation of the Directive, which may include e-mail, later this year.

The Data Protection Registrar has been working on a proposal to prevent people receiving unsolicited e-mails through the insertion of suppression markers in their Internet addresses and the Direct Marketing Association are working on ideas for an e-mail preference scheme.

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for licences for the export of (a) paramilitary, (b) security and (c) police equipment to Indonesia have been (i) granted, (ii) refused and (iii) revoked since 13 November 1997; and of those separate totals, if she will state the individual export licence category for each of them. [35719]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows. Between 14 November 1997 and 6 March 1998 inclusive, 29 Standard Individual Export Licences were issued to export to end-users or consignees in Indonesia goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List"), and none was revoked; two applications for such Licences were refused. This information is summarised below, broken down according to the entries in the Military List under which the goods on each licence are controlled (known as their rating). It could not be broken down in the manner requested as the equipment covered by most entries in the Military List could be used by military, paramilitary or police end-users. Standard Individual export licences can cover a range of goods, controlled under several entries in the legislation. Where this is so the licence is included in the Table in the total shown against each of the relevant ratings.

No Open Individual Licences for such exports were issued or revoked in this period, and no applications for such licences were refused. This does not include Media OIELs, which are Open Individual Export Licences authorising the export to any destination of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists when working in areas of conflict.

The information should be considered in light of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint), on 30 October 1997, Official Report, Columns 870–71.

In addition to the above, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Indonesia during the period concerned under various Open General Export Licences. Copies of all such licences are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what armaments have been licensed for export to Indonesia since 13 November 1997. [38127]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 April 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) today.

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what impact the criteria set out in the written answer of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, have had on the (a) number and (b) proportion of export licences circulated to other departments by the Export Control Organisation. [36758]

Mrs. Roche: The criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs are intended to ensure that arms transfers are managed responsibly and that they do not contribute to internal repression or international aggression. Therefore, the announcement did not result in any change to the arrangements by which DTI circulates applications. Irrespective of whether or not they have to be circulated, the number of applications received by the Department at any time is affected by many factors, and any change could not be ascribed to any one factor alone.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list (a) all United Kingdom arms exports and (b) all arms export deals for which licences have been (i) refused and (ii) cancelled since 1 May 1997. [28717]

Mrs. Roche: The Department of Trade and Industry does not compile records of exports to any destination.

The Export Control Organisation's databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows.

Internet

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on the European Commission's stance on the United States proposal to exempt international trade on the Internet from customs duties; and if the Government will be pursuing this issue through the World Trade Organisation. [37584]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The EU and the US agreed a joint statement on electronic commerce at their summit last December. This included an agreement to work as soon as possible toward a global understanding that there would continue to be no customs duties on electronic transmissions. This remains the Government's policy. The treatment of electronic commerce in the World Trade Organisation is currently being pursued by the Government in discussion with the European Commission and other EU Member States.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has received from trade officers in British embassies in (a) Japan, (b) Germany, (c) South Korea and (d) the USA, on the impact of the current level of the sterling exchange rate and its effects on (i) British exports to that country and (ii) inward investments from that country to Britain. [36343]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The Government are aware, through information from our posts abroad and other sources, of the difficulties being faced by exporters, particularly in Europe and East Asia, as a result of the current level of sterling. The Government's aim is for a stable and competitive pound over the medium term, and to achieve this they are committed to delivering a stable macroeconomic framework in which businesses can plan and invest for the long term.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Randall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has held with EU partners in relation to the problems associated with millennium computer compliance. [25357]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 February 1998]: The Millennium Bug was discussed at the Telecommunications Council on 26 February and the Internal Market Council on 30 March and will continue to be discussed in the Council of Ministers at all suitable opportunities. My Department is also organising a high level Presidency conference in London on 8 May for Millennium Bug experts from all Member States. the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry has raised the issue in meetings with her French, German and Swedish counterparts and will continue to do so in meetings with her EU colleagues as the opportunity arises.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received in the last fortnight about the Millennium Bug Hotline. [32682]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: None.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will pass questions tabled to her Department regarding Action 2000 to Action 2000; and if she will request them to reply to hon. Members. [29747]

Mrs. Roche: My practice is to consult Action 2000 on Questions which relate to their activities before replying.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce measures to regulate the charging activities of consultancies that market services for dealing with millennium compliance. [38530]

Mrs. Roche: I have no plans to do this. Action 2000 and the Business Links are tasked with signposting businesses to the best available help.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she estimates the regulators for gas, water, telecommunications and electricity will confirm that their utilities will be millennium compliant; and if she will make a statement. [37489]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 April 1998]: Ofgas is already monitoring the preparations which members of the gas industry are making to ensure millennium compliance. Reports received to date indicate that most companies will have achieved millennium compliance for critical systems by January 1999. Ofgas will be following-up shortly with the remaining gas companies who have not yet responded.

Ofwat can confirm that it expects water and water and sewerage companies to be millennium compliant. It has required all companies to supply details of their plans to achieve compliance before 1 January 2000. It intends to hold a seminar with the companies shortly to discuss the issues, including contingency plans. In addition, it will be visiting a number of companies.

Oftel is satisfied that most network operators are making adequate preparations and Oftel is continuing to take an active role in monitoring these preparations. Most operators plan to confirm that their equipment is millennium compliant in the first half of 1998. Oftel plan to write to all operators again in June to get an update on progress.

Offer recently wrote to all licensees and other bodies in the electricity supply industry to seek information about their approach to the millennium issue. They wish to ensure that IT problems will not significantly affect electricity supplies. A reply by 30 April was requested.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on progress to date made by the Action 2000 group and their programme for the next six months. [32285]

Mrs. Roche: On 22 January 1998, Don Cruickshank, Chairman of Action 2000, launched the Millennium Bug campaign. the initial activities included: promoting the importance of the issue and sign posting help, identifying practical help and guidance, investigating measures to redress the current shortage of IT skilled people, making available information on tools and services, assessing the current extent of the problem and monitoring progress.

On 26 February the Chairman announced a second programme of action, which includes specific advice on embedded systems, advising on product compliance and software testing, and producing a set of Millennium case studies.

Action 2000's outline plan for the coming months includes:

updating and improving the Hotline service, website and Information material, working with the Departments for Education and Employment and Trade and Industry on the Training for 20,000 "Bug Fixers" as announced by the Prime Minister on 30 March 1998, Official Report, columns 374–76, providing a toolkit to help Business Links work with businesses, implementing a programme of training for the Personal Business Advisers and Special Advisers in Business Links and their equivalents in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, developing a database of information on software support contractors and available diagnostic packages, developing a questionnaire and benchmarking process acceptable across all business sectors, implementing a communications programme to ensure all business are made aware of the significance of the problem and sign-posting sources of help, and, participating in a project to identify the particular risks across the public sector.

Exports

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the export per capita of each of the standard regions in (a) 1979, (b) 1987 and (c) the latest available year. [38120]

Mrs. Roche: Data on exports by regions are not available.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the value of exports to India in each of the last 20 years. [38121]

Mrs. Roche: Information on UK exports to India in each of the last 20 years is given in the following table:

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the present value of United Kingdom exports to (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Indonesia. [38119]

Mrs. Roche: In 1997, UK exports of goods to India were worth £1,576 million, Pakistan £269 million, and Indonesia £701 million.

Information for exports of services in 1998 is not yet available.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what regulations cover clean-up and decontamination operations involving the removal by high-pressure water hoses of radioactively-contaminated bird droppings from buildings not located on licensed nuclear facilities. [37836]

Mr. Battle: Protection of workers and the public from any work involving ionising radiation is covered by the provisions of the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985 and is regulated by the Health and Safety Executive. The disposal of any radioactive materials, whether from licensed nuclear sites or elsewhere, is subject to the provisions of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. In addition, the disposal of any radioactivity, liquids or material resulting from such work is regulated by the Environment Agency.

A number of bodies, including the Environmental Agency, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Health and Safety Executive, the Department of Health and the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB), are closely involved in the work to remove the contaminated bird droppings from the house in Seascale and to ensure that it is undertaken in compliance with all the relevant health, safety and environmental regulations, including the Health and Safety at Work Act, 1974.

Departmental Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of her Department's energy usage was from (i) renewable energy and (ii) combined heating in each year since 1989–90. [36166]

Mrs. Beckett: The Department purchases electricity from commercial suppliers. These suppliers obtain their electricity from a number of sources including renewables and combined heat and power.

Institute of Food Research

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when she expects to publish the Atkinson report on the future of the Institute of Food Research; what were the terms of reference; and if she will make a statement on the Government's response to its recommendations; [38350]

(2) what impact the establishment of the Food Standards Agency will have on the role of the Institute of Food Research; [38346]

Mr. Battle: The Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC) set up a working group, chaired by Professor Bernard Atkinson, with the following terms of reference:

to assess the extent to which the programme of work at the Institute of Food Research (IFR) contributes to the need for underpinning food research identified by BBSRC, the food industry and others; to examine the effectiveness of the present two-site operation, and the strengths and weaknesses of alternative arrangements, including the strengthening of organisational links between the IFR laboratories and their respective universities; to make recommendations as appropriate for the organisational structure of the IFR and to identify any additional management and scientific skills required to ensure its future effectiveness.

It is for the BBSRC Council to take decisions on the future of the IFR, and subsequent action as necessary. The Council considered the working group's report on 10 February, and issued a press release the following day giving details of its conclusions to date.

I understand that the report was in the nature of advice to the Council and Chief Executive, and contained commentary that would be commercially damaging if published, as well as references to individuals. The BBSRC is therefore not inclined to publish the report. However, once final decisions are taken in the light of the further analysis of options for the future development of the IFR, currently being undertaken by the Chief Executive, BBSRC intends to publish the rationale for those decisions.

The White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" made it clear that basic and strategic research into food would continue to be funded by the Research Councils and carried out by Research Council institutes, other institutes and universities as at present. The Institute of Food Research (IFR) will continue to be sponsored and funded by the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council.

The Food Standards Agency will be responsible for determining its own research needs and commissioning research where it thinks best. I understand that the BBSRC working group, chaired by Professor Atkinson, recommended that a new strategic plan should be established in close partnership with the major users and beneficiaries of the IFR's research, and in particular that discussions should begin as soon as possible with the Agency to ensure that the IFR's research effectively underpins the Agency's work. The BBSRC Council agreed that the future development of the IFR and its scientific programme should be considered in the light of this and other recommendations from the working group, and the further analysis is proceeding accordingly.

Bilderberg Group

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the operations and influence on world trade of the Bilderberg Group. [37923]

Mrs. Roche: The Department has made no such assessments.

Newsprint

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the implications for the newsprint industry of the regulations increasing the contents of recycled paper in newsprint. [38525]

Mrs. Beckett: The Private Member's Bill on the recycled content of newsprint, which is now before the House, has a number of implications for the newsprint industry. These, and others relating to trade, competitiveness and the environment are all currently being assessed by the Government. Newsprint manufactured in the UK last year contained an average of 92% recycled paper.

Paper Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the effects of the strength of sterling on the competitiveness of the paper industry. [38527]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government clearly understand the worries of exporters and manufacturers in the paper industry and elsewhere at the rise in the pound. However, we are determined not to pursue policies leading to cycles of boom-bust. That is why the Government have taken the necessary decisions to secure a long-term economic framework, based on low inflation and sustainable public finances which will deliver a stable and competitive pound.

Energy Research

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount (i) in actual terms and (ii) in terms of the percentage of public expenditure on energy research and development will be spent in 1997–98 on research and development for (a) nuclear fission, (b) nuclear fusion, (c) fossil fuel generation and (d) renewable energy sources. [36882]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 30 March 1998]: My Department's estimated energy programme expenditure in 1997–98 was £222.2 million. The detailed expenditure figures requested, which reflect commitments inherited from the previous Administration, are as follows (percentage in brackets):

nuclear fission: nil

nuclear fusion: £17.1 million (7.7%)

fossil fuel generation: £3.7 million (1.7%)

renewables: £11.1 million (5.0%).

Food Science Contracts

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the food science research contracts allocated by the BBSRC in 1997–98 broken down by (a) length of contract, (b) value of contract and (c) institution securing the contract. [37950]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The BBSRC awards a competitive strategic grant (CSG) to the Institute of Food Research (IFR) annually. The figure for 1997–98 was £8,617k, including additions for superannuation, and reductions for MAFF transitional arrangements.

Unfortunately, in answer to my hon. Friend's previous question on 1 April 1998, Official Report, Columns 565–566, the figures for the BBSRC competitive strategic grant to the Institute of Food Research for 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 were wrongly stated. The correct information is:

The CSG is used by the Institute to fund research projects within BBSRC's remit. A list of projects started between April and August 1997 have been placed in the Library of the House; the length of each project is also provided. Typically one third of the projects funded from the CSG change each year; at 1 April 1997 therefore the CSG was already being used to fund a large body of research, details of which are not included in this answer.

In 1997–98, IFR also won a number of BBSRC ROPA awards. The total amount awarded, the projects and their duration have been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition BBSRC awards grants for food research to universities and other higher education institutions through the usual Research Council responsive mode procedures. A list of new awards in 1997–98 have been placed in the Library of the House; the lists show the total amount awarded by institution, and the titles and duration of the individual projects.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the food science research contracts allocated by (a) the Economic and Social Research Council, (b) the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, (c) the Medical Research Council and (d) the Natural Environment Research Council in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98, broken down by (1) length of contract, (2) value of contract and (3) institution securing the contract. [37948]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 6 April 1998]: A list of the grants awarded by the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) in the area of food science has been placed in the Library of the House.

The Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC) awarded 43 grants starting in the period 1/4/94 to 31/3/98 relevant to the food and drink industries and a list of these has also been placed in the Library of the House.

The Medical Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council do not fund research into food science.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the private sector partnerships currently being undertaken in her Department and its agencies. [38305]

Mrs. Beckett: The following PFI/public private partnerships are currently in procurement within DTI and its agencies:

(i) The Radiocommunications Agency IT Strategic Partnership;

(ii) Electronic Government through Administrative Re-engineering;

(iii) The Teddington site re-development (National Physical Laboratory).

EU Structural Funds

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the Government's response to the latest proposed eligibility criteria for European Structural Funds with particular reference to Objective 1 funding; [36338]

(2) what recent representations she has made to the European Commission regarding the proposed eligibility criteria for areas awarded Objective 1 status, with particular reference to proposals on population density. [36339]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 27 March 1998]: We have now seen the draft regulations for Structural and cohesion Funds—which are part of the wider Agenda 2000 reform package. The regulations must now be agreed by all fifteen Member States and approved by the European Parliament.

I and Ministerial colleagues have pressed the Commission, and will continue to push, in respect of Objective 1, for flexibility around the 75 per cent. GDP threshold to allow for margins of error and for equal treatment of areas of sparse population like the Highlands and Islands, together with consideration for the special circumstances of Northern Ireland.

Job Creation

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the basis of her Department's calculations of the costs per job created in cases where Government support is sought. [37867]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 April 1998]: For RSA grants, the basis of the Department's cost per job (CPJ) calculation is the value of the grant divided by the number of full time equivalent (FTE) jobs directly created or safeguarded by the project. The definition of a full time equivalent job is 30 hours per week or more. Two part-time jobs of 15 or more hours per week count as equivalent to 1 full time job.

Supermarket Closures

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will limit the powers of a commercial company to close a supermarket on financial grounds if its closure would adversely affect the amenities of the local community. [36420]

Mrs. Beckett: Commercial decisions are matters for the company. Assessing the needs of local communities is the responsibility of local council.

Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to make it compulsory for employers to provide life insurance cover for workers in the offshore oil and gas industry. [32036]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 March 1998]: This is also a matter for the Department of Transport, Environment and the Regions. The Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 requires employers, with some exceptions, to insure their liability to employees for bodily injury or disease (including death arising from such injury or disease) sustained during their employment. The purpose of the Act is to ensure that funds are available to pay any compensation awarded where an employee (or dependant) has been successful in a civil action brought to establish an employer's liability for the injury or disease suffered by the employee. It is not the Government's policy to require employers to provide insurance cover for injury or disease where no such liability is established.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantity of individual or total pthalates was discharged by the offshore oil and gas industry in each of the last five years; and what assessment he has made of the reliability of the figures. [32388]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 5 March 1998]: No products containing pthalates are known to have been discharged offshore in the last 5 years. No products containing pthalates are currently listed in the Offshore Chemical Notification Scheme.

Coal Miners Pension Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans the Government have to transfer money from the staff pension scheme of British Coal workers; what consultations she has undertaken concerning those proposals; and if she will make a statement. [28993]

Mr. Battle: Following wide consultation in 1993/94 in the run-up to coal privatisation, arrangements were put in place to safeguard the interests of members of the British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme (BCSSS). In exchange for providing a comprehensive guarantee that pension and deferred pension entitlements will rise at least in line with the retail prices index (RPI), the BCSSS Trustees agreed that the Government should receive 50% of any surpluses identified at periodic Scheme valuations.

The payments which the Government receive from surpluses in the BCSSS and its sister scheme, the Mineworkers' Pension Scheme, should be viewed against the backdrop of the deficiency contributions which the taxpayer has made to the Schemes. In the last 20 years alone these have totalled some £3 billion. In providing guarantees to the two Schemes, the Secretary of State is underwriting a liability the value of which is some £13.5 billion.

Post Office

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with (a) management and (b) trades unions over her plans to give greater commercial freedom to the Post Office. [38142]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Following my announcement last May of a review of options for granting the Post Office greater commercial freedom, I have consulted a wide range of interested parties, including the management and unions of the Post Office. I last met both management and union representatives on 6 April.

I and my officials will continue to have discussions with both management and unions during the next phase of the review, the terms of which were announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Reed) on 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 63.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of Post Office Counters' policy of increasing agency arrangements with multiple retailers at the expense of sole traders; and if she will make a statement. [38533]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Decisions relating to individual post office agency appointments are the operational responsibility of Post Office management. I understand from Post Office Counters Ltd. that they do not operate any policy of preferring multiple retailers to sole traders in making agency appointments and that each case is judged on its merits in the light of established criteria and interviews.

Car Prices

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she will take to put pressure on the European Commission to reduce discrepancies between prices for cars in the United Kingdom and other EU countries. [38064]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 6 April 1998]: I am determined to ensure that UK consumers are able to buy cars at the lowest possible prices. The European Commission, in January, announced its decision to fine Volkswagen ECU 102 million (about £67 million) for prohibiting its Italian dealers from selling cars to buyers from Germany and Austria, who wished to take advantage of the lower prices in Italy. DTI officials are currently discussing with the Commission what the implications of this case are for UK consumers wishing to buy right-hand drive cars at the lowest possible cost.

At the Government's initiative, the Commission are also undertaking studies of price differentials in EU markets, and the Government are keen for this work to be pushed forward.

Corporate Governance

Mr. Love: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to introduce minimum standards of corporate governance; and if she will make a statement. [38375]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made it clear when announcing the Government's plans for a major review of company law on 4 March 1998, Official Report, columns 636–37, that, while she did not rule out legislating to improve standards of corporate governance, she was in the first instance looking to companies and institutional investors to deliver improvements based on the best practice recommendations made by Cadbury, Greenbury, Hampel and others. The text of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's speech, which was made at a conference organised by Pensions Investment Research Consultants Limited (PIRC), is available on my Department's web site at http://www.dti.gov.uk/Minspeech/pircfin.htm.

Advertising Standards Authority

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce legislation to replace the Advertising Standards Authority with a statutory body. [38301]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: No.

Toys (Safety)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the current regulatory safeguards on the use of PVC in toys for small children. [38300]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: There is no evidence that products have been marketed in the United Kingdom which breach the internationally accepted levels for phthalates. Under the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1995 and the General Product Safety Regulations 1994 suppliers are under a statutory obligation to supply safe toys and other products intended for children and action can be taken against a supplier of such articles found to release unacceptable levels of phthalates.

I am most concerned to ensure that our children are not exposed to dangerous childcare articles and toys. The UK is therefore taking a lead in Europe in seeking to produce a more satisfactory test method for the release of phthalates.

Coalminers (Lung Disease)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the former coalminers suffering from lung disease are likely to receive compensation following the recent High Court decision against the British Coal Corporation. [38924]

Mr. Battle: On 6 March the Department complied with a Court Order giving it four weeks to send detailed proposals to solicitors acting on behalf of the plaintiffs to settle the over 20,000 current claims and thousands more which are expected. We believe these proposals are fair and sensible and provide the quickest way of ensuring valid claims are settled. At a further hearing on 27 March the solicitors acting for the plaintiffs requested a three month adjournment which the Court granted, to allow for further discussions to take place with the Department's agents to seek to agree settlement arrangements.

We welcome this opportunity to further refine our proposals and hope that agreement can be reached quickly so payments can begin. However, we are also conscious that a further 3 month delay may be unwelcome to some claimants, particularly those who are severely disabled. We have therefore offered to make interim payments of £2,000 to a minimum of 5,000 elderly claimants currently in receipt of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema. We will begin making such offers as soon as the claimants' solicitors, whose co-operation we require, are able to submit evidence of receipt of the benefit. I am sure they will do all they can to assist this process to ensure that payments can be make quickly to their injured clients.

Some of the claims are expected to be from those miners who suffered from chronic bronchitis, alone. We are seeking to agree sensible payment arrangements also for those in this group. However none of the lead cases included in the judgment provided clear guidance on an appropriate level of damages for this condition.

Therefore, if it is not possible to reach agreement, it may be necessary, while accepting the liability established by the Court, for a further case to be run to establish a level of damages against which other similar claims can be assessed. We believe that such a case could, if need be, be brought to trial quickly and we would do everything possible to ensure that this happened.

I have said already that we have a duty to deal promptly with valid claims that stem from British Coal's previous activities and actions over many years. We are actively meeting that duty. We hope the plaintiffs' solicitors work with us to agree sensible arrangements to allow relevant claims to be processed systematically, and valid claims to be settled as soon as is practicable.

Fireworks

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from retailers of fireworks following the recently introduced prohibitions; and if she will make a statement. [38411]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The DTI has received some 60 identically styled letters from retailers with information about stocks of fireworks which may no longer be sold to the general public following the introduction of the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997. These letters relate mainly to one particular brand of fireworks.

Retailers have been informed that, following discussions between the DTI and the Health and Safety Executive, the latter has issued a Certificate of Exemption to facilitate the safe return to suppliers of stocks of the prohibited fireworks which have been taken out of their original transport packaging. The trade associations representing retailers and the firework industry have been informed that an Exemption Certificate has been issued.

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to prohibit the sale of further categories of fireworks; and if she will make a statement. [38412]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997 which I made in September 1997 introduced firework safety measures in two stages.

From October 1997 the minimum age for people who can be sold fireworks was raised from 16 to 18 and large bangers, flash bangers, Chinese Crackers, fireworks with erratic flight, aerial shells, maroons and other large fireworks were banned from sale to the public.

Further measures came into effect on 31 December 1997. These included:

- prohibiting the sale to the public of all other types of bangers and mini-rockets;
- limits on the size of fireworks such as Roman Candles which can be sold to the public;
- a new age use warning on packets of sparklers.

The measures taken since the election have contributed to the largest fall in fireworks injuries for 23 years.

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the level of fireworks stocks currently held by retailers in the United Kingdom which fall within the recently banned categories; and if she will make a statement. [38410]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Precise details of stocks of fireworks which may no longer be sold to the general public are not available. The proposals for safety regulations to prohibit certain fireworks were published in mid-June 1997 and sent to a wide range of companies, as well as to organisations representing retailers and other interests. The proposals, which received widespread publicity in the national press and on television, were also sent direct to all major firework suppliers to ensure that they were in a position to offer advice about possible changes in the law before deliveries of fireworks commenced for the 1997 firework season.

EU Internal Market Council

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what topics were discussed at the EU Ministerial Council on the Internal Market on 30 March; and what matters were voted upon. [38769]

Mrs. Beckett: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe chaired the Internal Market Council in Brussels on 30 March. My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs occupied the UK seat.

The Council held a debate on three key issues of the Single Market Action Plan; implementation of the Plan, the state of transposition, application and effective implementation of internal market legislation, and the functioning of the principle of mutual recognition, on which it agreed formal conclusions. The Council also assessed progress on the initiative "Simpler Legislation for the Internal Market" (SLIM) and endorsed Commission proposals to establish Business Test Panels through which business will be consulted about selected new EU draft legislation.

The Council held an extensive exchange of views on the proposal for a Regulation creating a Commission intervention mechanism for the elimination of certain obstacles to trade. The Council expressed its resolve to find, urgently, an effective solution to the problem.

The Council took note of the progress achieved on the draft Regulation on the Statute for a European Company and gave its support to continuing work along the present lines.

The Council heard presentations from the Commission on: the proposed Directive on the harmonisation of certain aspects of copyright and related rights in the Information

Society, the Communication on Public Procurement, the Communication on Commercial Communications, and The Year 2000 Computer Problem.

The Council took note of the Memorandum "Creating a European Community and international environment to develop electronic commerce" presented by the French delegation.

No voting took place at this Council.

Working Time and Young Workers Directives

Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made in implementing the EC directives on working time and young workers. [38770]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have today issued a consultation document which contains draft regulations to implement the Working Time Directive and the Young Workers Directive as far as it relates to adolescents.

The measures will create protection for workers from being required to work over an average of 48 hours a week; the entitlement to paid annual leave and daily, weekly and in-work rest periods; limits on night working; and special protections for young people.

The consultation period will last until 5 June. We will then consider the responses before drafting any changes to the regulations. A new order will then be laid before Parliament. We aim to have the measures in place by 1 October.

HEALTH

London Lighthouse

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of London Lighthouse. [38433]

Ms Jowell: We are aware of the decision by the London Lighthouse Council of Management to resite the Lighthouse's day care and other support services for people with HIV and AIDS in new premises from September 1998 and that this will involve the closure of its residential unit and the sale of its Lancaster Road building. This option was identified following extensive discussions between London Lighthouse and Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority to identify a viable option for restructuring the Lighthouse's services in view of the financial difficulties it faces. The Lighthouse, like many other HIV and AIDS voluntary organisations, has been responding to changes in service requirements for people with HIV and AIDS which have been identified through local needs assessment and the need to maximise value for money, and, more recently, taking into account the effects of combination therapies, results from which so far are very encouraging in delaying the progression of HIV and the onset of AIDS.

I have met twice with the London Lighthouse to be advised about its position and I welcome the work which the London Lighthouse has done with Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority to identify an option which seeks to safeguard the London Lighthouse's day care and other support services. Work is in hand to identify the practical implications of this option. Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster have agreed in principle to provide transitional funding to support the option, subject to public accountability requirements and a robust business case which meets the necessary financial conditions.

The Lighthouse has made a valuable contribution over the years to raise awareness and change attitudes to HIV and AIDS, and has continued to play a national role in the development of policy and services for people with HIV and AIDS in changing circumstances created by new treatments. I have agreed in principle to repeat its grant of £150,000 for 1998/99, bringing the total financial support provided by the Department over the years to the Lighthouse to more than £4 million.

NHS Trust Appointments

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appointments he announced to NHS trusts in North East England excluding Yorkshire in the week ending 3 April; how many of those appointed were declared to be present or past Labour councillors or Labour activists; and how many were councillors or activists of any other party. [38537]

Mr. Milburn: Full details of the people appointed to National Health Service trusts boards in the north east in the week beginning 3 April 1998 were made public in a press release issued by the NHS Executive Northern and Yorkshire Regional Office on 31 March 1998. Copies of the press release have been placed in the Library.

Adoption

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he plans to ratify the Hague Convention on adoption; [25805]

(2) what funds have been made available to agencies specialising in intercountry adoption in line with the Hague Convention. [25813]

Mr. Boateng: No funds have been made available by the Department of Health to voluntary adoption societies to provide intercountry adoption services.

The 1993 Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption will be ratified as soon as the necessary legislation is enacted and implemented.

The approval of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State will be recommended for societies who meet the standards and criteria set out by the Department and which encompass the principles underpinning the 1993 Hague Convention on intercountry adoption.

Private Health Care

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimates he has made of (a) the number of patients treated privately each year and (b) the impact of this on the size of NHS waiting lists; [36730]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of patients treated privately in each of the last three years. [36467]

Mr. Milburn: The information for in-patient treatment in National Health Service hospitals is as follows. Information shown is based on finished consultant episodes, which represent the number of episodes of care under individual consultants. There are known shortfalls and data quality problems in the provisional 1996/97 data which are currently being investigated.

Ordinary admissions and day cases combined: completed episodes (FCEs) of private patients treated in NHS hospitals

Year	FCEs
1993–94	93,048
1994–95	99,359
1995–96	107,182
1996–97	89,831

Notes:

Data for 1993–94 to 1995–96 are grossed for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data.

Data for 1996–97 are provisional and are derived from ungrossed HES data.

Information on the number of patients treated in the independent sector is not collected. Professor Brian Williams looked at the activity of short stay independent hospitals in 1992–93. The results of his survey were published in the British Medical Journal on 25 June 1994 (BMJ 1994;308:18699–701).

We have made no estimate of the impact on NHS waiting lists. This will depend on how far patients treated privately would otherwise have been accepted for treatment under the NHS.

Frozen Embryos

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many frozen embryos are currently in storage in the United Kingdom. [37272]

Ms Jowell: This figure is not available. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 requires clinics to notify the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) when embryos are stored or used. There are some embryos which were stored before the 1990 Act came into force. Clinics were not required to notify the HFEA of these.

According to the most recent verified information held by the HFEA between 1 August 1991 to 31 March 1996 the number of embryos put into frozen storage during the course of an IVF treatment cycle was 105,317. The number of female patients who stored embryos from IVF cycles during that period was 17,254.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to NHS trusts to reduce waiting lists for essential medical care. [37259]

Mr. Milburn: In reducing waiting lists we remain committed to the principles that the National Health Service must retain the capacity to respond promptly and effectively to emergencies and that clinical priority and the urgency of a patient's condition are the main factors which should determine how long patients on waiting lists wait for treatment. We have set the target that by April 1999 there will be fewer patients awaiting admission to hospital in England than the 1.16 million we inherited after the election. This will be the stepping stone to meeting our election pledge to reduce waiting lists to 100,000 below the level we inherited by the end of the present Parliament. £320 million of the extra £500 million for the NHS announced in the Budget will be spent directly on cutting waiting lists. Every health authority and trust will have to play their part and will be set an individual, challenging waiting list target to meet by 31 March 1999.

General Practitioners (Sunderland)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase the number of general practitioners in Sunderland; and if he will make a statement. [37864]

Mr. Milburn: We have introduced a number of national policy measures to improve the recruitment of general practitioners which Sunderland Health Authority has been implementing locally. The health authority has recently introduced a career start scheme and has successfully recruited two salaried GPs to commence work in the near future. It also intends filling two additional GP posts under this initiative later this year. The Priority Healthcare Wearside National Health Service Trust has employed a salaried GP under the NHS (Primary Care) Act 1997 Pilot scheme to provide personal medical services to the residents of the Pennywell area. A third out-of-hours centre to provide GP services through the night also became operational in January 1998.

NHS Road Fuel

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of expenditure on road fuel in the NHS for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [37840]

Mr. Milburn: The available information covers expenditure on the road fuel usage covering approximately 90 per cent of the National Health Service. This is in the table.

Notes:

In addition to the above figures, NHS Supplies' Wholesaling Division's transport fleet spent approximately £1.33 million on fuel costs (almost exclusively Derv) in 1997–98 and estimate this will rise to £1.47 million in 1998–99.

The figures for bulk are for England and Northern Ireland, but the retail figures are for England only. This said the element in the bulk figures relating to Northern Ireland is small.

Retail purchase costs above include VAT as transactions are made at commercial petrol stations.

All figures have been rounded.

There are several issues that make estimates difficult for 1998–99. These are:

- budget duty changes will have an effect on demand
- oil is a commodity traded in US$ and, as such, is subject to global supply/demand fluctuations as well as currency fluctuations
- oil companies, despite being nationally recognised names, are becoming increasingly regionalised around their terminals eg Esso in the far south, Total in Yorkshire and Humberside and so on. In the supply of bulk, this regionalisation can be clearly seen and it is likely to become increasingly obvious in the retail sector as well. This regionalisation will have an effect on costs across the country. There were also a number of oil company partnerships and take overs last year and this trend is expected to continue.

New Variant CJD

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has evaluated into the correlations between the genetic changes in the prion protein of humans and the various routes of prion infection. [37870]

Ms Jowell: Apart from cases of iatrogenic Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease linked to medical interventions, the route of infection for human prion diseases is not known. There are currently no research findings to link directly the route of infection with the type of prion protein seen in human prion diseases.

The National CJD Surveillance Unit investigates the make-up of the prion protein gene in individuals affected by all types of CJD in parallel with their detailed surveillance activities. This work is ongoing and designed to give as much information as possible about potential routes of transmission and the genetic make-up of all individuals affected by the various types of CJD.

The most significant research into identifying different strains of Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies (TSEs) published so far are:

"Molecular analysis of prion strain variation and the aetiology of new variant CJD" (Collinge et al, Nature 383, 24 October 1996)

"Transmission to mice indicate that "new variant" CJD is caused by the BSE agent" (Bruce et al, Nature, 389, 2 October 1997)

"The same prion strain causes nvCJD and BSE" (Hill, Collinge et al, Nature 389, 2 October 1997).

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee considered the two sets of findings published in Nature on 2 October 1997 and concluded that they provided convincing evidence that the agent which causes nvCJD is the same as that which causes BSE. However the findings do not tell us anything about the mechanism by which nvCJD patients contracted the disease.

East Kent Health Authority

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many East Kent patients, and at what cost, were referred for treatment outside East Kent during 1997 (a) in total and (b) by each of the district general hospitals; [38196]

(2) for the last full year for which data is available, if he will itemise expenditure outside East Kent by East Kent Health Authority according to the particular specialism or treatment category; [38198]

(3) what was the total cost of referring East Kent patients for treatment outside East Kent in each year since East Kent Health Authority was set up; and what allowance has been made for the (a) current and (b) future years. [38197]

Mr. Milburn: This information is not held centrally and should be requested directly from East Kent Health Authority.

Healthy Living Centres

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways voluntary sector organisations will be involved in the operation of healthy living centres. [38202]

Ms Jowell: There will be the opportunity for voluntary sector organisations to play a significant role in delivering the healthy living centres initiative. Centres will be able to involve a range of partnerships at local level, for example the voluntary, public and private sectors working with each other, local general practitioners and local people. The scheme is designed to be flexible so that projects can be specifically tailored to meet the different needs of different communities.

Private Beds

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) total number of beds and (b) number of private beds in each health authority in the North Thames region of the NHS. [38374]

Mr. Milburn: The number of beds in each health authority in the North Thames region is shown in the table.

Information on the number of private beds is not collected. The last year of collection of any information on private beds was in 1990/91 and was collected from district health authorities and special health authorities.

[1] Health authority figures have been created from trust figures where the trust's main site is located within the health authority. The information on the main site of the trust and its health authority is based upon NHS organisation codes, derived from trust information. Some trusts have hospital sites which cross health authority boundaries. Therefore, the figures will not reflect the true position for the number of beds within each health authority area.

[2] Figures exclude neonatal cots in materoity wards and beds in residential care, but include paediatric intensive care beds.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) total number of beds and (b) number of private beds, in each region of the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [38373]

Mr. Milburn: Information on National Health Service beds is set out in the table. Information on the number of private beds in NHS hospitals was last collected from district health authorities and special health authorities in 1990/91 when there were 2,956 authorised private beds in NHS hospitals.

Midwives

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to include midwives in the recommended structure of primary care groups. [38194]

Mr. Boateng: We have made clear in the White Paper The New NHS and in the guidance we have issued on establishing primary care groups, that we expect all community nurses and general practitioners to work together in partnership if the new arrangements are to succeed. Community nurses will also be represented in the governing arrangements of the primary care groups but it is a matter for community nurses locally, working with their health authority and general practitioners, to decide exactly how they will be represented.

Hearing Damage

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government have taken to study the extent of damage to people's hearing from loud music in public places. [38176]

Mr. Boateng: We have commissioned no research into damage to people's hearing from loud music in public places. However, the Medical Research Council Institute of Hearing Research is currently carrying out a study entitled "hearing in young adults" which shows that for young people aged 18–25, leisure noise has increased by 200 per cent. since the 1980s. There is no evidence yet that the hazard is leading to a direct reduction in hearing function, but there is an increase in tinnitus.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department will take to remove cash disincentives to breast units achieving breast cancer screening rates of more than 10 per cent. in women aged over 65 years; [38149]

(2) what rate of take-up of breast cancer screening in women aged over 65 years current levels of funding can support; [38155]

(3) if the Government makes additional resources available to breast screening units when uptake in the over 65 years age group exceeds 10 per cent. locally. [38539]

Ms Jowell: The National Health Service breast screening programme invites women aged 50–64 for screening by mammography every three years, with screening for older women available three-yearly on request.

When the breast screening programme was set up, funding was provided centrally. Subsequently, the money for breast screening was included in general allocations to health authorities and it is therefore for health authorities to make available the necessary resources for this service.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the uptake rate for breast cancer screening in women aged over 65 years; [38153]

(2) what plans the Government have to increase the uptake rate for breast cancer screening in women aged over 65 years. [38148]

Ms Jowell: The Government are keen to encourage women aged 65 and over to request free three-yearly mammograms, and their entitlement to do so is widely publicised. In particular, the National Health Screening breast screening programme is working with Age Concern to encourage older women to request screening. They have produced a leaflet called "65 or over: You are still entitled to breast screening", which is widely available from general practitioners surgeries, clinics, some post offices and some shops. In addition, women who have already been screened through the programme are informed of their right to request free three-yearly screening after the age of 64.

The number of women aged 65 and over being screened has risen from 39,000 two years ago to over 57,000 last year. We are delighted that more and more women are making use of this important service.

English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what functions are ascribed to the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting under section 6(1) (e) of the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1997; and if the Board received funding in respect of those functions. [38712]

Mr. Milburn: The Board is required to provide a careers service (Statutory Instrument 1993/629). Funding for this is not authorised by statute and is the subject of separate approval by the Treasury until March 1999, after which new arrangements will be introduced.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics his Department collates in respect of the caseloads of community psychiatric nurses. [38170]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the caseloads of community psychiatric nurses is not collected centrally. The Department does collect the full-time equivalent totals of qualified nurses working in community psychiatry by National Health Service trust, as well as the number of first contacts per year. The ratio between the two gives the average number of patients seen per qualified nurse working in community psychiatry per year for each trust.

Smoking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce the take up rate of smoking amongst young women. [38224]

Ms Jowell: In 1998/99 the Government are funding a Health Education Authority run adult smoking education campaign costing £5.5 million, which identifies 5 key target groups, two of which are women and pregnant women aged 16 -24, and also fund a teenage smoking campaign costing £1 million which especially focuses on teenage girls (ages 11–15).

We are currently considering ways in which to reduce tobacco consumption and our conclusions will form part of the Tobacco Control White Paper, which will be published later this year.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions his Department has taken to increase public awareness of the short-term and long-term effects of passive smoking on health. [38223]

Ms Jowell: The Department recently published (on 11 March 1998 by Press Conference) a report by the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health. The report describes the major issues considered by the committee, including the health effects of exposure of non-smokers to environmental tobacco smoke and lists the committee's conclusions and recommendations.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library and copies are available from the Stationery Office.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce legislation to regulate smoking in public places. [38222]

Ms Jowell: We are currently considering what measures might be included in the Tobacco Control White Paper to be published later this year.

New Deal (Training)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance, in terms of extra resources and preparatory training, will be given to National Health Service trusts when recruiting new employees through the New Deal. [37998]

Mr. Milburn: Employees recruited through the new deal will receive the same induction and training as any new employee in the National Health Service. Employers participating in the scheme will receive a weekly subsidy for six months. A £750 allowance to support training, leading to a recognised qualification is also available. In addition the Employment Service offers practical help, advice and support to employers involved in new deal and aims to fill vacancies quickly, efficiently and appropriately when a job and person specification have been placed with them.

I wrote to health authority and NHS trust chairmen on 11 March in a joint letter with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Disability Rights telling them of the benefits of the schemes and encouraging NHS employers to support the welfare to work programmes. The NHS Executive is issuing further guidance on the scheme and the benefits to the NHS.

Prescription Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the percentage of the over 60 years population who are regularly taking (a) one prescription drug, (b) two to four drugs, (c) five to six drugs, (d) seven to eight drugs and (e) nine or more drugs each week; [38362]

(2) if he will estimate the percentage of the over 60 years population who are found on admission to hospital to be regularly taking (a) one prescription drug, (b) two to four drugs, (c) five to six drugs, (d) seven to eight drugs and (e) nine or more drugs each week. [38361]

Mr. Milburn: Information on patients' medication handed in on admission to hospital is not available. There is no readily available information on the number of prescription drugs people take regularly. The available information from the health survey for England in 1996 is given in the table.

Number of prescribed medicines by age

percentage

	Age 65–74	Age 75 and over
One	20	17
Two	17	18
Three	14	16
Four or more	22	31

Prozac

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of the population have been prescribed prozac in each of the past five years; and if he will estimate the figures for the next five years under present trends. [38363]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the number of people who have been prescribed prozac over the past five years is not available. The number of prescription items dispensed in England for prozac for the period 1992 to 1996 and an estimate for 1997 to 2001 is shown in the table. Under present trends it is estimated that prozac dispensing will increase by about 0.5 million prescription items per year.

Number of prescription items dispensed for Prozac (fluoxetine hydrochloride) for 1992 to 1996 and an estimate for 1997 to 2001 England

Year	Prescription items (millions)
1992	0.6
1993	1.0
1994	1.4
1995	2.0
1996	2.5
1997	3.0
1998	3.5
1999	4.0
2000	4.5
2001	5.0

Notes:
The figures for 1992 to 1996 are based on a full analysis of all prescriptions dispensed in England in the community, ie by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.
The estimates for 1997 to 2001 are based on current trends.

Post-traumatic Stress

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that those traumatised through the death of a relative in a road crash are offered professional support to help treat post-traumatic stress. [38349]

Mr. Boateng: A range of services, including those which specialise in the treatment of post-traumatic stress, are available within the National Health Service. Decisions concerning the treatment required for particular patients remain the responsibility of the medical practitioner. Decisions are taken on the basis of a thorough and individual assessment, combined with evidence of the effectiveness of treatment.

Private Health Work

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the revenue generated by private work and (b) the proportion of the trust's annual revenue generated by private work in each year since 1990 by NHS trust. [37131]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 31 March 1998]: The first National Health Service trusts were established in 1991. Information for each year from 1991–92 to 1996–97 has been placed in the Library.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of his Department's planned real level of expenditure on the National Health Service in 1995–96 prices in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, using (i) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the Financial Statement and Budget report 1997–98 and (ii) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the Financial Statement and Budget report for March 1998. [37135]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 1 April 1998]: Figures on real terms expenditure on the National Health Service can be found in the Departmental Report, copies of which are available in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list, for each financial year since the CSA began its operations, how many parents with care have ceased to claim (a) income support, (b) income-based job-seeker's allowance, (c) family credit and (d) disability working allowance as a result of CSA activity; and for each of the above benefits if she will list how many claims ceased because of (i) established benefit fraud, (ii) fraud was suspected but not proved and (iii) the claim ceased, but no reason was investigated for the termination of the claim. [38403]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Number of parents with care who have ceased to claim Income Support within four weeks of CSA activity (or eight weeks if the question of the parent with care's requirement to apply for maintenance is under consideration)

	Number
1993–94	[1]41,000
1994–95	60,226
1995–96	52,848
1996–97	43,658
1997–98	[2]35,588

[2] To the end of February 1998.

No information is available about the number of such cases where fraud was involved.

The information requested for parents with care ceasing to claim income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance is not available.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much parents with care on income support, whose claims predate April 1993, have (a) not been contacted by the CSA and (b) were contacted and whose case forms part of the CSA backlog; and by how many cases these numbers of claimants have been reduced in the financial year 1997–98. Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. David Rendel, dated 8 April 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency cases that pre-date April 1993.

Some 340,000 cases were deferred in December 1994 where the client was in receipt of Income Support prior to April 1993 and where there had been no Agency contact, and a further 16,000 cases deferred in January–March 1995 where a maintenance application form had been issued before July 1994 and either had not been returned or lacked the necessary information.

The Agency recommenced take on of these cases in November 1995, in line with the agreement made with the Secretary of State to recommence take on by December 1995.

It is not possible to give an exact figure for the number of deferred cases still outstanding. To obtain this a clerical examination of all the deferred cases would have to be made to find those appropriate for action and this would incur disproportionate cost. In November 1997, it was estimated that the number outstanding had reduced to around 150,000 cases.

This reduction is due to a number of reasons. The recommencement of take on mentioned above; also, in some cases where Income Support has ceased and the parent with care has made a fresh application for benefit, the Agency will have become involved and these cases will have been taken on; in other cases the parent with care will have requested that the Agency take on the case and this will have been done; finally, some clients will no longer be claiming Income Support.

Where the Agency has taken-on cases, the length of time taken to complete a maintenance assessment is measured, and cases which exceed 52 weeks are considered to be a backlog; this backlog currently stands at approximately 113,000 from 225,000 at 31 March 1997.

The Agency has developed and is now implementing a strategy for meeting its undertaking to clear its backlogs. All Business Units have put in place operational plans which will guide them towards the achievement of our stated objective of clearing backlogs by 31 March 1999.

The Agency is tackling the backlog of cases. However, we must balance the demands placed on us—to deliver Secretary of State targets, to continue to improve performance and improve customer service—and clearance of the backlogs.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints were received in 1997 against the workings of the Child Support Agency. [36701]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide a consistent, fair and efficient service to all its clients throughout the Child Support assessment process. In 1997 the number of complaints recorded by customer service managers of the Child Support Agency was 26,364. Correspondence received by Ministers in this Department and by the Chief Executive of the Agency is not categorised to show the proportion that relates to complaints. However, in 1997 Ministers received 1,179 letters from hon. and right hon. Members concerning the operations of the Child Support Agency. Over the same period the Chief Executive of the Agency received 8,187 such letters.

We are looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support scheme to see where improvements can be made and we expect to bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals later this year.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level of outstanding child maintenance debt, broken down according to debt considered (a) collectable and (b) uncollectable, giving reasons for such categorisation. [38397]

Mr. Keith Bradley: It is not right that so many absent fathers should seek to avoid paying the maintenance which their children are due. An extra £15 million is to be invested in the Child Support Agency this year and next, specifically aimed at increasing the amounts of maintenance which are paid.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. David Rendel, dated 8 April 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about child maintenance debt.

The amount of child support full maintenance assessment debt outstanding as at the 31 March 1998, was £691,416,505.67. This has increased from the amount reported as outstanding at 31 March 1997 in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1996–97 which was £513,029,000. The increase in the amount of maintenance debt is largely a result of the rise of the Agency's live and assessed caseload, which has risen from 585,220 at 31 March 1997 to 758,580 at 31 March 1998.

The Agency undertakes a Debt Analysis exercise at the end of each financial year, which estimates the collectability of the amounts outstanding. The results as at 31 March 1997 for 1996–97 are shown in the table attached, with definitions of the classifications. A similar exercise will be undertaken for 1997–98 and the results will be published in the Agency's 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts in July 1998.

I hope this is helpful.

Child support debt: 31 March 1997

Analysis of debt	Value of debt (£ million)	Percentage of debt
Collectable	230.7	44.9
Possibly Uncollectable	81.3	15.9
Probably Uncollectable	195.0	38.0
Deferred debt	6.0	1.2
Total	513.0	100

Collectable—amount outstanding which the Debt Analysis exercise revealed is likely to be collected. This takes into account factors such as regular contact with the absent parent, where regular payments are being made or an arrears agreement has been set up.
Possibly Uncollectable—amount outstanding which the Debt Analysis exercise revealed some uncertainty over whether it will be collected. The amounts are considered doubtful where, for example, payments have been infrequent or it has not been possible to establish an arrears agreement or impose a deduction of earnings order.
Probably Uncollectable—amount outstanding which the Debt Analysis exercise revealed is likely to be very difficult to collect due, for example, to the lack of contact with or the personal circumstances of the absent parent. In many of the latter cases the Agency has suspended recovery action until such time as the individual's circumstances change.
Deferred Debt—amount outstanding which the Agency has been able to defer indefinitely, provided absent parents meet certain conditions on payment of regular maintenance and any remaining debt.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list for each CSA division the name and location of each field office, indicating those (a) closed and (b) subject to staff reduction since April 1997; and what plans there are to (i) close and (ii) reduce the number of staff in each remaining office in the financial year 1998–99. [38396]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking for substantial and sustained operational improvements from the Agency, in particular on getting more maintenance paid, reducing the backlog and improving customer service.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the Chief Executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. David Rendel, dated 8 April 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency Field Offices.

I have placed a list of Agency offices by region, showing the information you have requested for the period from April 1997 in the library.

As I am sure you are aware, the Agency is in the process of reviewing its organisation to improve the service that we deliver. Our plans for re-organising are fully in line with the Government strategy of modernising the delivery of public services and reinforce more effectively parental responsibility. We believe our plans will increase compliance and the regularity of payment of maintenance and play an important part in helping lone parents return to work. It may help to explain some details of our current organisation to show how we plan to improve our accessibility to the public substantially.

The Agency currently has approximately 2900 staff working in Field offices throughout the country. In excess of 95% of those staff are engaged on backroom paper processing work so they do not have any face to face contact with the public at all and are no more accessible than those in the major processing centres. The number of staff years which are devoted to face-to-face contact is currently 120 which in many locations equates to fewer than one interview per day. We feel that this is not sufficient. Our restructuring will allow us to offer significantly more face to face contact on a peripatetic basis in a greater range of locations in conjunction with the Benefits Agency (with whom many of our clients are also concerned). At the same time we need to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of other forms of contact with customers. We also need to improve our overall cost-efficiency sufficiently to keep pace with increases of 50% in our workloads over the next 3 years.

We know that many of our customers who are working prefer to deal with us by 'phone rather than be visited at home or interviewed in one of our offices. We are developing proposals on how we might re-focus our resources to cope with an increasing workload while at the same time seeking to increase and improve both our telephone and our face to face contact. Our current thinking is that we can move processing work into the Child Support Agency Centres and larger local centres to provide economies of scale and much better value for money. Processing paper in small offices is significantly more expensive and our restructuring will allow us to increase our overall range of customer contact, as well as keeping pace with workloads.

While we may not retain a permanent presence at all our present sites we will provide interview facilities at a larger range of local outlets. We know that a proportion of our customers will want to have face to face contact with us for a number of reasons although not necessarily at a DSS office. We are exploring a number of options which will include for example Citizens Advice Bureaux or other Government facilities to increase our accessibility to the public.

I hope this is helpful.

National Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 13 March 1998, Official Report, column 394, what rate of real increase in average earnings is assumed in her estimate that Class 1 National Insurance contribution rates would stay constant if pensions and linked benefits were uprated by earnings in April 1999. [35925]

Mr. Denham: The analysis used an assumption based on data and evidence available at the time of the Pre-Budget Report. Although the extra cost of uprating in line with earnings would be £260 million, the rounding conventions used to calculate National Insurance contributions mean that the difference between the earnings assumption and the price assumption leads to a cost which is insufficient to trigger a change in the National Insurance contribution rate for April 1999.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have paid employees' national insurance contributions in each of the last 20 years; and what information she has on the likely numbers paying in each of the next 20 years. [37547]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

The Department makes no estimates of the number of employees who are likely to pay National Insurance contributions in future years. However, the Government Actuary undertakes a Quinquennial Review of the operation of the Social Security Acts to estimate the rates of contribution likely to be required in future years to meet the costs of benefits provided for under the National Insurance Scheme. The assumed number of future contributors in his Report on the Third Quinquennial Review under Section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975 published on 31 January 1995[1] was, in an average week, 22.7 million for the year 2000, 24.0 million for 2010 and 24.0 million for 2020.

The estimates for future years in the Government Actuary's report are based on a number of underlying economic and demographic assumptions. These include projections of the number of employees and self-employed people, assumptions about earnings and the level of the lower earnings limit and the level of unemployment. From these assumptions the Government Actuary derives the estimated average number of contributors in any week for future years. However, these estimates are not directly comparable with those for previous years given in the table. The figures in the table show the actual number of employees who paid some contributions during the tax year, and will therefore be higher than figures which show the weekly average.

Family Credit

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost of providing (a) milk tokens and (b) free school meals to family credit recipients (i) in cash terms and (ii) as a percentage of the total family credit budget. [36245]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

	Cash 1997–98 (£ millions)	As a percentage of the Family Credit budget
Cost of providing milk tokens to Family Credit recipients	50	Less than 0.5
Cost of providing free school meals to Family Credit recipients	200	Less than 1

Notes:

1. Costs are rounded to the nearest £50 million. The heavy rounding of the figures reflects uncertainties as to the exact cost of the provision, future take-up, and estimates of the numbers entitled.
2. No account has been taken of the fact that Family Credit recipients already receive the equivalent of milk tokens partly through an addition to their Family Credit benefit rates for purchasing liquid milk and partly through being able to purchase infant formula at NHS clinics at a reduced rate. In addition, provision is made in Family Credit for the replacement cash value of free school meals.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps the Government are taking to maximise take-up by eligible pensioner households of winter fuel payments; [36474]

(2) what estimate he has made of the proportion of pensioner households which will take up their entitlement to winter fuel payments. [36470]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel Payments are paid automatically without the need to claim, therefore take up is not an issue. Almost 10 million eligible pensioners, in over seven million households, have been identified from Departmental records. Each of these eligible pensioners should now have received a payment, at a total cost of around £200 million.

The award letter which accompanies the payment clearly explains the entitlement conditions and informs anyone who receives a £10 payment, but satisfies the conditions for a £20 payment, to contact the Benefits Agency Office which deals with their pension, or to telephone the Winter Fuel Payment Helpline, and request the balance. Requests for a review of the original decision to pay £10 are being dealt with as a matter of priority.

Similarly, where someone believes that they are entitled to a payment, but have not received one, they are advised in the Winter Fuel payment leaflet "Some extra layers to help keep pensioners warm this winter" to contact their local benefits Agency office to check. They may also contact the Winter Fuel Payment Helpline.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for what reasons Dr. and Mrs. Michael Norris of Broom Knolls, Lawford, Manningtree, Essex, were paid two winter fuel payments; and if she will make a statement; [35383]

(2) how many households have received winter fuel payments in excess of their entitlement; and what measures are being taken to recover excess payments. [35384]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for this winter and next, to help pensioners with fuel bills to a pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners receiving a Retirement Pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this winter's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data in around 15 million computer records, involving 15 qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost ten million payments will have been made to over seven million pensioner households by the end of March.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 8 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary questions asking for what reasons Dr. and Mrs. Michael Norris of Broom Knolls, Lawford, Manningtree, Essex, were paid two winter fuel payments; and how many households have received winter fuel payments in excess of their entitlement; and what measures are being taken to recover excess payments.

The making of almost ten million winter fuel payments to over seven million pensioner households before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency. This will have been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, received their payment of £50 during January.

Other eligible pensioners are entitled to a payment of £20 or £10. Where they live alone, are the only eligible pensioner in a household, or are of no fixed abode, they are entitled to £20; otherwise, they are entitled to £10.

In order to establish other eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to match around fifteen million computer records, involving fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Where only one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £20 was made. Where more than one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £10 was made.

Where official Departmental records are not correct or incomplete, it is possible that the amount of some payments may not correspond with the actual circumstances. For example, where two eligible pensioners live at the same address but in separate households. In such cases, each eligible person will have been sent a payment of £10 when they should have received £20. The award letter which accompanies the payment clearly explains the entitlement conditions and informs anyone who receives a £10 payment, but satisfies the conditions for a £20 payment, to contact the Benefits Agency Office which deals with their pension, or to telephone the Winter Fuel Helpline, and request the balance. Requests for a review of the original decision to pay £10 are being dealt with as a matter of priority.

Where two eligible pensioners live at the same address and in the same household, but the address details held on the relevant benefit computer records are incorrect or incomplete for either or both of them, the matching exercise may not identify more than one eligible person at the address recorded. In accordance with the provisions of the legislation each are entitled to a payment of £20. There is no overprovision in such instances, but any voluntarily offer to repay any amount would be accepted. When an erroneous payment has been made or payment issued for an incorrect amount, appropriate action will be taken regarding the excess/over payment.

In the case to which you refer, we have not been able to identify the couple named. However, we have identified two people with a similar name to those given who were not identified as living at the same address in the matching process due to differences on their computer records. We have no record of making any payments to the named persons you have asked about, but I will investigate further and reply separately on this matter.

So far, fewer than 10,000 of the £50 payments made during January have been identified as being incorrectly made. I am unable at present to provide you with information which takes into account payments of £20 or £10 made incorrectly. This is due to the fact that these payments are still in the process of being issued. It is anticipated that this information will be available some time after the end of April. I will provide the information on excess entitlement once it is available.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner couples erroneously received two cold weather payments; and how many have repaid the extra amount. [37838]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for two years (1997–98 and 1998–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners living in the United Kingdom who receive a retirement pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

There is no overprovision in such instances, but any voluntarily offer to repay any amount would be accepted. When an erroneous payment has been made or payment issued for an incorrect amount due to fraudulent intent, recovery of the excess/over payment will be considered.

I am unable, at present, to provide you with information on the number of incorrect payments and will write to you again once it is available.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

Incapacity and Disability Benefits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disabled people living in the Greater London area were awaiting appeals against reductions in (a) incapacity benefit and (b) disability living allowance on 1 March. [36582]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not available.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will instruct the Independent Tribunal Service to respond to the inquiries from the hon. Member for Chorley made by fax on 20, 23 and 24 March on behalf of a constituent; [36943]

(2) what percentage of telephone calls are answered by the Independent Tribunal Service within three minutes; [36945]

(3) if she will make a statement on the time taken by the Independent Tribunal Service headquarters to respond to requests for assistance on benefits matters from (a) the public and (b) hon. Members; [36944]

(4) how many complaints she has received concerning response times of the Independent Tribunal Service in Nottingham in the last year. [36946]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The operation of the appeals system is a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS).

ITS report that a response to my hon. Friend's fax was sent by its Nottingham office on Friday 27 March 1998.

The time taken to respond to inquiries varies according to the nature and complexity of the individual enquiry. All inquiries, from whatever source, are answered normally within two weeks.

Information regarding the percentage of telephone calls answered within three minutes are not kept and information about the number of complaints received regarding response times is not available.

We are determined to reduce the current delays and complexity in the appeals system. The Social Security Bill, which paves the way for modernising the delivery of Social Security, including the handling of appeals, is currently being debated in Committee in the House of Lords. We shall assume responsibility for the administration of the appeals system. We shall set and publish demanding targets for the administration of appeals and report on the results.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the benefit entitlements of persons who have significant savings only as a result of receiving compensation for vaccine damage as children. [37093]

Mr. Denham: Any lump-sum payment made in consequence of a personal injury—which would include a vaccine damage payment—can be ignored providing it is held in a Trust. The normal rules on deprivation of capital do not apply to a person who puts money from such an award into a Trust. The treatment of payments from Trusts depends on the terms and nature of the Trust itself and the purpose and use of the payments. For example, a regular payment from a discretionary Trust can be fully disregarded provided it is intended and used for items other than normal day-to-day living expenses. These rules enable personal injury awards to be used for the benefit of the injured person without affecting income-related benefits. More generally, we will keep the operation of the income and capital rules under review as we develop the principles announced in the Welfare Reform Green Paper.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how she will ensure in reforming housing benefit that claimants are not exposed to the combination of high rents and low benefit. [37346]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are reviewing rent and Housing Benefit policy as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review on Housing and in line with our welfare reform objectives. Our aim continues to be to ensure that everyone has the opportunity of a decent home.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost of housing benefit payments in each of the last 15 years (a) in total and (b) per tenant for (i) council tenants, (ii) housing association tenants and (iii) private tenants. [37543]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Information is not available on the cost per tenant in each year, and is therefore expressed in terms of average weekly benefit per tenant.

1. No separate estimate of Housing Benefit expenditure for Housing Association and Other Private Tenants are available before the 1992–93 financial year as this tenure type was not separately collected before May 1992.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the cost of housing benefit fraud in the most recent year for which figures are available. [37544]

Mr. Denham: The first Housing Benefit review, in 1995, estimated the overall cost of incorrectness in Housing Benefit to be around £1 billion: this estimate includes confirmed and suspected fraud, as well as claimant and official error. The Department is currently conducting a further review to update that estimate.

Together with local authorities, we have taken significant steps to tackle Housing Benefit fraud, but more needs to be done. We made it clear in our Green Paper "New ambitions for our country: A contract for welfare reform" that rooting out fraud is an essential part of welfare reform. We have set up a fundamental review of the Department's counter-fraud strategy and are looking to strengthen each part of it, through earlier prevention, more effective deterrence, better detection.

Benefits System

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what part she intends that local authorities will play in the development of the modernised benefits system. [37345]

Mr. Field: We want to develop a Social Security system that promotes the wider aims of welfare reform: work for those who can; security for those who cannot. Local authorities have an important part to play in this process and we are consulting them on our proposals in the Green Paper—"New ambitions for our country: a contract for welfare reform".

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many beneficiaries there are currently receiving industrial injuries disablement benefit. [37513]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows. At 5 April 1997, it is estimated that there were 262,300 Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit assessments in payment. This figure will include some people who receive benefit for more than one injury or disease.

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total payment of industrial injuries disablement benefit over the last 12 months. [37512]

Mr. Denham: Expenditure on Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit in 1996–97 was £685 million.

The latest estimate for expenditure on Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit in 1997–98 is £695 million.

The figures for 1996–97 are consistent with the appropriation accounts for that year and those for 1997–98 have been taken from the 1998 Social Security Departmental Report.

State Pension

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total cost of the state pension in each of the last 20 years; and if she will estimate on future costs for each of the next 20 years assuming they continue to be uprated in line with prices as at present and inflation at 2.5 per cent. [37545]

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what (a) the original savings assumptions were and (b) the current savings assumptions are there for the Benefit Integrity Project in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000; [37930]

(2) what factors were taken into account in the revision of savings assumptions, for the Benefit Integrity Project for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [37929]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The original savings estimates show that for an investment of £11.5 million in each of the three years covered by the 1996 Public Expenditure Survey, savings were assumed as £27 million in 1997–98, £40 million in 1998–99 and £35 million in 1999–2000.

These savings estimates comprise £20 million/£30 million/£28 million from the targeted review and renewal activity undertaken by the Benefit Integrity Project and £7 million/£10 million/£7 million as a result of fraud detection activity in Disability Living Allowance generally.

The latest savings estimate for the Project alone is £5/40/40 million, and this is the figure included in the Department's Memorandum to the Social Security Select Committee. The estimated savings for the Project have fallen from £20 million to £5 million in the first year, largely because live running has shown that processing performance has been considerably slower than expected. Estimated savings for years two and three are higher than anticipated as a result of higher than expected average savings per case coupled with cases being pushed forward from year one. The original assumption was that 220,000 cases would be processed in each of the first two years. Monitoring data up to the end of December 1997 suggests that 60,00 cases will have been processed by the end of year one. The latest estimate is also based on the expectation that the Project will process 220,000 cases in year two.

The latest estimate does not take account of the impact of the additional safeguard introduced on 9 February on further evidence gathering. Nor does it include additional changes which Secretary of State and Baroness Hollis have decided to implement following consultation with the disability organisations. We will continue to work with the disability organisations and will monitor the effects of improvements.

A revised savings estimate for 1997–1998 and subsequent years will be produced when all the information up to the end of March has been received. These may need further revision as monitoring continues.

Lone Parents

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list, from October 1999, the marginal tax rates which will apply to lone parents receiving (a) working families tax credit, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit for those with gross weekly earnings of (i) up to £49, (ii) £50 to £99, (iii) £100 to £149, (iv) £150 to £199, (v) £200 to £249, (vi) £250 to £299 and (vii) £300 and above. [38400]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table:

25	0.00	65.0	85.0

1. All benefits have been uprated to 1998–99 prices.

2. The following assumptions have been made:

(a) The benefit unit is defined as being a lone parent with 2 children under the age of 11 working full-time.

(b) Given that Marginal Deduction Rates can vary within the specified income bands a mid-point for a measure of gross weekly earnings has been used.

(c) In order that the benefit unit is still entitled to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit at gross weekly earnings in excess of £300, housing costs at £90 per week and council tax liability at £28 per week have been used in the calculations.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many lone parents with children (a) under 11, and (b) aged 11 years and above, working more than 16 hours per week after 1 June 1998 will be better off as a result of the changes announced in the Budget and due to take effect in November 1998 by (i) up to £2.50, (ii) £2.51 to £5, (iii) £5.01 to £7.50, (iv) £7.51 to £10 and (v) £10.01 and above; and how many will remain unaffected; [38398]

(2) how many lone parents with children (a) under 11 and (b) aged 11 years and above, working more than 16 hours per week after 1 June 1998 will be better off as a result of the changes announced in the Budget and due to take effect in April 1999 by (i) up to £2.50, (ii) £2.51 to £5, (iii) £5.01 to £7.50, (iv) £7.51 to £10 and (v) £10.01 and above; and how many will remain unaffected. [38399]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in tables:

Child Maintenance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list for the last year for which figures are available the number of parents with care whose income exceeded their applicable amount through the receipt of child maintenance causing them no longer to be eligible for income support. [38395]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In 1996–97, the last full year for which figures are available, the child maintenance assessment was sufficient to move 2,083 parents with care off Income Support.

Housing Benefit Fraud

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much housing benefit fraud was detected in each London borough in (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95, (f) 1995–96 and (g) 1996–97; and if she will make a statement. [35210

Mr. Denham: We have made it clear in our Green Paper "New ambitions for our country: A Contract for Welfare" that rooting out fraud is an essential part of welfare reform. Our principle is that the benefits system should encourage openness and honesty and that the gateways to benefit should be clear and enforceable. We have inherited a system which is seriously afflicted by fraud. As the Report by the Committee of Public Accounts on Housing Benefit fraud has shown, the old ways of tackling fraud do not work on their own. That is why we are completing a fundamental review of the Department's counter-fraud strategy and are looking to strengthen each part of it: earlier prevention, more effective deterrence, better detection. In the longer term, we can prevent fraud by designing benefit systems which minimise the scope for fraud.

Together with local authorities, we are already taking significant steps to address Housing Benefit fraud through, for instance: new powers for local authorities to tackle landlord fraud, and providing financial support for a special pilot local authority team in London which is already at work to root out organised landlord fraud across London borough boundaries; supporting new visiting drives by local authorities to root out fraud—over £1 million is being provided to London boroughs this year which is expected to generate more than 200,000 extra visits; a new framework of guidance being introduced this year, backed up with extra financial support, to help authorities check claims better and so prevent fraud; the new Benefit Fraud Inspectorate, whose inspection programme which has started recently will help raise standards in local authorities and the Department; and improved liaison arrangements and systems between the Benefits Agency and local authorities.

Data on the amount of Housing Benefit fraud detected by local authorities were not collected centrally before 1993–94. Tables showing (i) the amount of weekly benefit savings claimed in respect of Housing Benefit fraud and (ii) identified incorrect payments of Housing Benefit due to established fraud for the years 1993–94 to 1996–97 for each London local authority have been placed in the Library.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans her Department has to tackle benefit fraud in the London Borough of Hackney. [38409]

Mr. Denham: The Department has a wide range of measures in place for tackling benefit fraud nationwide, including in Hackney. We have set out in the Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare" our three pronged approach to fraud consisting of improved detection, more effective deterrence, and better prevention. To that end we are reviewing our strategic objectives governing counter fraud work, and we expect to be in a position to announce the outcome of the Review shortly.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much housing benefit fraud has been detected in the London boroughs of (i) Hackney, (ii) Islington, (iii) Lambeth and (iv) Southwark; what is the estimated level of undetected housing benefit fraud in each borough; and what are the averages for fraud (a) detected and (b) undetected in Inner London boroughs. [38236]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

The first Housing Benefit review, in 1995, estimated the overall cost of incorrectness in housing benefit to be around £1 billion: this estimate includes confirmed and suspected fraud, as well as claimant and official error. The Department is currently conducting a further review to update that estimate.

Claimants (Medical Examinations)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the total sum paid in each of the last five years to doctors for examining DSS claimants and appellants; [37534]

(2) What remuneration is paid, and how it is calculated, to doctors who examine claimants for DSS benefits and appeals; and if she will make a statement. [37535]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency Medical Services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Marshall, dated 7 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what remuneration is paid, and how is it calculated, to doctors who examine claimants for DSS benefits and appeals, and what is the total sum in each of the last five years to doctors for examining claimants and appellants.

Doctors who conduct examinations for Disability Living Allowance/Attendance Allowance are paid £47.00 per home visit. Doctors conducting examinations for Incapacity Benefit/Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit/Severe Disablement Allowance are paid £30.70 per hour if the medical is performed at a BA Medical Centre, and £37.90 per one and a half hours if the medical is performed by the visit to the customer's address. In addition, doctors are paid £37.90 per one and a half hours for War Pension medical examinations at the customer's home.

Information on the cost of the fees paid to doctors in each of the last four years is contained in the table below:

2. Expenditure figures are estimates and have been calculated using the Housing Benefit Management System 1 per cent. sample and Departmental Reports. Estimates are based only on cases recorded on the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry as being asylum seekers. They therefore exclude other claimants in receipt of Urgent Case Payments who may in fact be asylum seekers, but are not identified as such. They also exclude any asylum seekers, in receipt of Housing Benefit who are not in receipt of Income Support, although the number of these cases is thought to be very small.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest five million pounds.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Electronic Voting

Miss McIntosh: To ask the President of the Council what estimate she has made of the cost of electronic voting in the House. [38471]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The cost of any possible electronic voting system would depend on what form of electronic voting, if any, was chosen. The Modernisation Committee will shortly be writing to all Members inviting their views on a range of options, which include retaining the current voting system. Cost will be one of the factors taken into account when reviewing these options.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31289]

Mr. Robin Cook: Records of the number of requests for meetings with Ministers are not kept. My Ministerial colleagues and I have met approximately 114 Labour Members and 15 Conservative Members since 1 May 1997. This does not include meetings with or addresses to Parliamentary bodies such as All Party Groups.

We are happy to consider requests for meetings from hon. Members of all parties and as a general rule these have been granted.

Fishing Vessels (Searches)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which dates during March United Kingdom fishing vessels were stopped in British waters and searched by Irish patrol boats; and what representations he has made to the Irish Government about this matter. [37558]

Mr. Robin Cook: UK fishing vessels were stopped by the Irish naval vessel, the LE Emer on 18 March in UK fisheries limits. We have raised the matter with the Irish authorities who regret that boarding took place inside UK fisheries limits.

Kenya

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has had with the Kenyan Government over abuses of the human rights of students. [38585]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We maintain a vigorous dialogue with Kenya on human rights issues, including the treatment of students, through our High Commission in Nairobi and at Ministerial level.

We pressed last year for the repeal of the Public Order Act, the principal legal instrument that had been used to break up meetings organised by Opposition politicians and students. We welcomed its repeal in November, and look to the Kenyan authorities to ensure that non-violent student activities and protests are not obstructed. Our High Commission raised specific cases in which students' human rights had been violated with the Kenyan Attorney General in February.

Business Ambassadors

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 1998, Official Report, column 771, concerning ambassadors for British business, if he will list the duties of each of the ambassadors. [38895]

Mr. Fatchett: The Ambassadors for British Business have volunteered to give some of their time when overseas to promote the UK's wider commercial interests; for example by giving keynote speeches, calling on Ministers or talking informally to prominent local business people. Their exact activities will depend on what they and the diplomatic post concerned agree would be most effective at furthering the UK's commercial interests in a market.

British Ambassadors

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries where the British Ambassador or High Commissioner is female; and how many ambassadors and High Commissioners are male. [38894]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Britain is represented by a female Ambassador or High Commissioner in the following countries: Belarus, Chile, Irish Republic, the Netherlands, Rwanda, South Africa and Uzbekistan.

One hundred and twenty eight Ambassadors or High Commissioners are male. A further ten Permanent Representatives hold the personal rank of Ambassador. They are all male.

Camilla Carr and Jon James

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received regarding the situation of the hostages Camilla Carr and Jon James in Chechnya. [38617]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Chechen authorities have said that Camilla Carr and Jon James are alive, but we do not know where or in what conditions they are being held. We are working hard, with the Centre for Peacemaking and Community Development, to ensure that the Russian and Chechen authorities give top priority to securing their safe release. Any news we have is shared with Camilla's and Jon's families, who are withstanding their ordeal with great courage and dignity. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is looking forward to meeting the families on 23 April.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has had from the Spanish authorities to his representations over the incident of dangerous flying by a Spanish coastguard helicopter in Gibraltar waters on 13 March. [38983]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The immediate response of the Spanish authorities was to reject our protest. They have since agreed to examine our video and photographic evidence of the incident.

South Africa

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of talks between the EU and South Africa during the United Kingdom presidency. [38652]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are committed to a swift and favourable outcome to the negotiations between the EU and South Africa for a Trade and Cooperation Agreement. We hope a conclusion will be possible during our Presidency. The General Affairs Council on 30 March was a useful step forward in preparing the next round of negotiations later this month.

GCHQ

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with GCHQ regarding its proposed re-siting; and if he will make a statement. [38768]

Mr. Robin Cook: I approved the initiation of GCHQ's PFI project in May last year, and fully support the aim to consolidate their operations onto one site. The project is at an advanced stage and four tenders for a single-site solution are currently being evaluated. I will consider GCHQ's recommendations for the final stages of the project next month. An announcement on the future location of GCHQ is expected during the second half of the year.

UN Member States

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the member states of the United Nations with which the United Kingdom does not have diplomatic relations. [39172]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom does not have diplomatic relations with four of the 185 Member States of the United Nations. These are: Bhutan, Iraq, Libya and North Korea.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Governments of India and Pakistan concerning their ratification of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty and the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. [38735]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I discussed this subject with the Indian High Commissioner on 2 April. The UK has made its position clear to the Indian and Pakistani governments in the past and will continue to do so in the future. We continue to urge India and Pakistan to sign both treaties and to support other measures to promote non-proliferation. Our aim is to promote global non-proliferation and efforts to improve security in the region.

Nuclear Smuggling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to combat nuclear smuggling. [38791]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We believe strongly in the need for an effective and proportionate range of national and international mechanisms to prevent the theft of nuclear material and, on the rare occasions where this does occur, to ensure that there are effective mechanisms to combat nuclear smuggling.

This Department has focused on implementing the G8 Programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Nuclear Material, agreed in 1996. We continue to encourage expanded participation in this programme. Most recently, the UK led a successful exercise to test a Points of Contact system which provides for the immediate exchange of information on those few cases where nuclear material of proliferation concern is smuggled.

The UK also works extremely closely with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) which for some years has had a programme for collecting and sharing information on confirmed trafficking incidents. In the face of increasingly effective action by governments, the number of incidents has declined significantly over the last couple of years. None has been recorded in the UK.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the average marginal tax rate for those families who qualify for the working families tax credit. [38220]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 April 1998]: About 65% of families who qualify for the Working Families Tax Credit will face a marginal deduction rate of between 66.7% and 69.9% (depending upon the exact rate at which they pay tax and NICs), with marginal rates cut for about 540,000 families, most by over 10 percentage points.

Child Care Tax Credit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a description of the way childcare for tax credits will operate, including the operation of the fast path to help new employees with childcare costs before their first payment of wage or salary is received; and if he will ensure all benefits agencies and jobcentres are made aware of this provision. [38235]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 April 1998]: The childcare tax credit is an integral part of the "Working Families Tax Credit". An important priority for the WFTC will be to ensure that it gets to recipients efficiently and quickly. The design of the WFTC—whether paid through employers or direct from the Inland Revenue—will aim to deliver the tax credit to individuals reliably and on time. Work is continuing on the administrative arrangements and the Inland Revenue is consulting representatives of employer and other appropriate organisations on the details of how the WFTC will be paid through the wage packet. We aim to make the new literature for WFTC claimants widely available, and to enable both Benefits Agency and Employment Service staff to help clients with the WFTC.

Open-ended Investment Companies

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the timetable for the introduction of legislation to enable cash and fund-of-fund open-ended investment companies to be launched in the United Kingdom domestic market; and if authorisation of cash and fund-of-fund open-ended investment companies will be achieved in time for prospective ISA providers to promote such companies as an alternative to authorised unit trust schemes. [38854]

Mrs. Liddell: I have announced my agreement in principle to the establishment of fund of fund and cash fund oeics and am currently considering the most appropriate way of introducing them. Whether they will be introduced in time for the launch of ISAs in the spring of 1999 depends on which method for introducing them is adopted.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the proposed Budget changes in capital gains tax have been introduced as simplifications of the current system. [36790]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Budget changes in capital gains tax will lead to eventual simplification of the current system by:

progressively eliminating indexation and substituting the taper which is easier to understand;

phasing out retirement relief;

merging CGT reinvestment relief and the Enterprise Investment Scheme; introducing a single rate for trusts and the estates of deceased persons.

National Lottery

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes will be made in the treatment of National Lottery expenditures in the definition of general Government expenditure and in the national accounts following the implementation of the National Lottery Bill [Lords]. [38559]

Mr. Darling: None.

Tobacco

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been collected in fines from people who have been caught illegally reselling cheap duty paid tobacco bought in Belgium in each year since 1979. [38306]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that central figures are not kept in this form.

Energy Products

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in discussions with the European Commission on harmonising taxation of energy products; and if the Government will continue to maintain a duty exemption on fuel for navigation in private pleasure craft. [38111]

Dawn Primarolo: A meeting of the technical working group which is examining the draft Energy Products Directive is expected towards the end of April. The Government have made it clear in negotiations that one condition of our eventual acceptance of the Directive is that the future of existing derogations be unambiguously settled.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the changes to acceptance in lieu of tax announced on 17 March alter the accounting treatment of such transactions. [36771]

Dawn Primarolo: Under the proposed change, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport will no longer reimburse the Inland Revenue for the amount of tax satisfied by the acceptance of heritage assets, and the Inland Revenue's accounting procedures will be altered accordingly. The change will simplify the operation of the scheme within the Government.

Income Tax

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for the current tax year the income tax and national insurance paid and child benefits received by (a) a single person without dependants, (b) a lone parent with one child aged four years, (c) a lone parent with two children aged four and six years, (d) a single earner married couple with one child aged four years and (e) a single earner married couple with two children aged four and six years, where the gross income is (i) £150, (ii) £200, (iii) £250, (iv) £300 and (v) £400 per week and is wholly from employment; and if in each case he will show the equivalised income before housing costs on the assumption that there are no child care costs, housing costs are £75 per week and all available benefits are claimed, and showing also the tax and national insurance contributions net of benefits as a percentage of the equivalised incomes. [32428]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is contained in the tables.

The figures in the table are weekly amounts for the 1997–98 tax year. They assume that the earner in the household is working over 30 hours a week for family credit purposes.

The standard McClements scales have been used to determine equivalised income. This is the same process that is used in the DSS's Households Below Average Income publication.

Income tax and NICs, less child benefit and family credit, are shown as a percentage of gross earnings, with negative figures where the family is a net gainer overall from direct taxes and benefits.

Some of these families may also be entitled to housing benefit and council tax benefit. However, as this will depend upon the composition of the housing costs (between mortgage payments, council tax, and rent) housing benefit and council tax benefit has been left out of these figures.

Cash Ratio Deposits

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about cash ratio deposits. [39315]

Mr. Darling: The Government's Response to Consultation on Cash Ratio Deposits (CRDs) is published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The Government's decision that the initial CRD ratios should be zero on Eligible Liabilities up to £400m and 0.15 per cent. on Eligible Liabilities over £400m reflects the responses to consultation, taking into account the desire for administrative simplicity and clarity. I believe this is a fair outcome.

Earnings

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many employees currently earn more than £450 per week. [39193]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 20 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on weekly earnings.

The latest available information, from the New Earnings Survey 1997, is contained in the table below:

Percentage of employees on adult rates, whose pay for the survey pay-period was unaffected by absence, gross weekly earnings, Great Britain, April 1997 greater than £450

Full-time	23.3
Part-time	1.1
All	18.3

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of Great Britain-based workers earned less than (a) £2, (b) £2.50, (c) £3, (d) £3.50 and (e) £4 per hour in April (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [38293]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dennis Roberts to Mr. Jon Trickett, dated 20 April 1998:

In the absence of the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on hourly earnings.

This information is shown in the table below using estimates available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS).

Work is being undertaken to assess the quality of earnings data from the LFS and the New Earnings Survey (NES). Current indications are that the LFS provides the more reliable estimates of workers on low pay, but nevertheless tends to overestimate the proportion of low paid workers. The figures in the table should therefore be taken as upper estimates of the proportions. Details of this assessment of the quality of earning data are expected to be published in the May issue of Labour Market Trends copies of which will be available from the House of Commons Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Gale: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was, for the last five years for which figures are available, the proportion of the total legal aid bill incurred in (a) Counsel's fees and (b) QCs' fees; what was the proportion of the legal aid bill in each of the last five years spent on white collar fraud trials; and if he will make a statement. [38796]

Mr. Hoon: For criminal higher legal aid, the proportion paid to counsel and to QCs in each year was as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
All counsel	54	55	55	53	55
QCs	21	24	27	26	26

For civil legal aid, criminal magistrates' legal aid, and advice and assistance, the proportion paid to counsel was as follows:

percentage

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
All counsel	11	11	11	10	15

It is not possible to identify separately payments made to QCs as the rank of counsel is not recorded on the Legal Aid Board's computer systems.

Nor is it possible to identify separately expenditure on white collar fraud. Fraud related offences are recorded under the general headings of "fraud", "false accounting" and "other forgery". In each of those categories, in completed Crown Court cases, the proportion of criminal higher expenditure was as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Fraud	10.8	10.3	15.1	14.4	10.5
False accounting	0.6	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.5
Other forgery	0.8	1.1	0.9	0.6	0.6

Learning Disabilities (Training)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the need for (a) barristers, (b) judges and (c) magistrates to receive training to increase their awareness of the needs of people with learning disabilities, when they appear in courts. [37597]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB) which is a non-departmental governmental body. The JSB has held a number of sessions in both induction and continuation training on equal treatment, including dealing with people with learning difficulties. The JSB has an advisory committee whose remit has recently been extended to cover all aspects of equal treatment training, including training on increasing awareness of the needs of people with learning disabilities. The Committee will be considering guidance for members of the judiciary on handling those with learning difficulties.

Lay Magistrate training is delivered by Magistrates' Courts' Committees but the JSB has a role in setting the syllabus. Lay Magistrates already address the issue of equal treatment of all in the light of their judicial oath but the JSB has recently completed a project identifying the skills and knowledge required by Lay Magistrates to ensure equality of treatment for all who appear in their courts.

Training of barristers is a matter for the General Council of the Bar.

Judicial Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 March 1998, Official Report, column 679, if he will list the groups and individuals his officials consulted informally about the possible appointment of a judicial appointments commission. [38226]

Mr. Hoon: The groups and individuals informally consulted by officials on the possible establishment of a judicial appointments commission included the following:

The Lord Chief Justice
The Master of the Rolls
The President of the Family Division
The Vice-Chancellor
The Senior Law Lord (Lord Goff of Chieveley)
The Senior Presiding Judge
The Council of Her Majesty's Circuit Judges
The Association of District Judges
The Registrar of Criminal Appeals
The Director of Studies, Judicial Studies Board
The Chief Metropolitan Magistrate
The Chairman of the Association of Stipendiary Magistrates for England and Wales
The Right Hon. the Lord Kingsdown (Association of Lords Lieutenant)
The Chairman of the Magistrates' Association
The Duchy of Lancaster Office
The President and senior officials of The Law Society
The Chairman and the Chief Executive of the General Council of the Bar
The Prime Minister's Appointments Secretary
Kate Malleson, University of Westminster
Dr. Cheryl Thomas, Wolfson College, University of Oxford
Professor Rodney Brazier, University of Manchester
Senior officials of the Lord Chancellor's Department
The Magistrates and Tribunals Training Adviser, Judicial Studies Board
The Commission for Racial Equality
The Equal Opportunities Commission
Recruitment and Assessment Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what factors he took into account in deciding to consult informally rather than formally on the possible creation of a judicial appointments commission. [38208]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor decided that officials should conduct informal consultations with a view to identifying the issues of principle and practicality that would need to be addressed in any formal consultations on the possible creation of a Judicial Appointments Commission. Following this consultation, the Lord Chancellor announced in October that he had decided not to proceed with further work, including any formal consultation process, on the possible creation of a Commission in view of the other substantial priorities facing his Department and his decision to concentrate on making changes in the existing judicial appointments process to improve its openness, flexibility and effectiveness.

Welsh Language Schemes

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Court Service and the Legal Aid Board have to implement Welsh language schemes. [38080]

Mr. Hoon: The Court Service and Legal Aid Board must comply with the Welsh Language Act 1993. The Court Service has prepared a draft scheme, which is acceptable to the Welsh Language Board. However, the Board before approving the scheme had indicated it will wait until Rules of Court are settled for hearing arrangements. As yet, no date has been given for the Rules to be settled. However, the Court Service has, since April 1997, provided most of the services referred to in the draft scheme. An information sheet is available in all court offices in Wales which explains the scheme.

The Legal Aid Board is also working with the Welsh Language Board on a Welsh Language Scheme which will set out how the Board will comply with the Act. The Legal Aid board has been asked to prepare a scheme and submit it to the Welsh Language Board by 26 February 1999.

PRIME MINISTER

Trade Union Recognition

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from (a) trade union leaders and (b) business leaders in respect of the Fairness at Work White Paper. [37959]

The Prime Minister: I have met TUC and CBI representatives on several occasions to discuss trade union recognition and related issues.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings he has had with other heads of Government to discuss the issues of millennium compliance. [37961]

The Prime Minister: I have recently chaired two major international conferences at which the Millennium Bug issue was highlighted. Leaders at both the European Conference on 12 March and the ASEM 2 Conference on 3–4 April agreed the importance of international co-operation to ensure millennium compliance.

Ministerial Accommodation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 376, what valuation figures relating to the accommodation and furnishings provided to Ministers are prepared for tax purposes. [38212]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 April 1998]: The situation remains the same as under the previous administration. It is accepted by the Inland Revenue that Government Ministers occupying official residences by reason of their office meet the statutory conditions (mainly in Section 145(4) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988) for exemption from a tax charge on provided living accommodation. So no valuation figures are required by the Inland Revenue in relation to provision of such residences. There will be a charge where furnishings or other services are provided and figures will be prepared for inclusion in Ministers' tax returns.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Banking Supervisory Authorities

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries her Department provided support to banking supervisory and regulatory authorities in 1997–98; and what plans she has for such support in 1998–99. [39185]

Clare Short: In 1997–98 the Department for International Development provided support to banking supervisory and regulatory authorities in the following countries:

India
Russia
Ukraine
Moldova
Slovak Republic
Czech Republic
Bosnia

We have also provided some support to the Bank of England's Centre for Central Banking Studies.

For Central and Eastern Europe and the CIS regions, in 1998–99 we will continue to support the Central Bank of Russia and other authorities where we have a useful contribution to make. Support to the Reserve Bank of India will continue and, in view of the recent events in South East and East Asia, we intend to make available support to banking authorities in this region. We are also currently exploring, in collaboration with other organisations, the role we can play in building sound regulatory structures for microfinance institutions.

Micro-finance Institutions

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development with which central banks her Department has held discussions concerning the introduction of legislation for the regulation and supervision of micro-finance institutions. [39182]

Clare Short: The growth in numbers and in size of microfinance institutions (MFIs) has been significant only in the last couple of years. Most MFIs have received their capital as grants from donors which means that supervision and regulation was not an immediate issue. Only recently have a relatively small number of MFIs become sufficiently mature to be seeking to raise more capital from depositors. It is at this stage that supervision and regulation become particularly important as individuals' savings are at stake. To date the performance of central banks in regulating and supervising formal financial institutions has been weak due to problems of political corruption.

The Department for International Development are at the forefront of the donor winning, by supporting the work being done by the Microfinance Network and by CGAP in this important area. Bilaterally, we are at the most advanced stage in Bangladesh, where DFID are supporting a supervision and regulation project, which includes dialogue with the central bank. As more MFIs mature, we anticipate providing further support to this area.

Development Programme Support

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries in 1997–98 governance problems interrupted her Department's programme support. [39186]

Clare Short: During 1997–1998 development programme support was interrupted in Sierra Leone and Ethiopia.

All aid was suspended to Sierra Leone when the democratically elected government were overthrown in a military coup on 25 May 1997. During the coup period we supported the government in exile to prepare for their return to Freetown; selected refugee programmes for Sierra Leoneans in neighbouring countries; and the humanitarian work of the international committee of the Red Cross in Sierra Leone. Following the return of the democratic government to Freetown, we provided immediate technical and logistical support to assist the re-establishment of the functions of government and further humanitarian assistance.

Following our expression of concern over a policing incident, the Ethiopian government requested that the UK should undertake no new development projects in July 1997. Following constructive discussions between the governments, aid talks with the Ethiopian government were held in March 1998 and it was agreed to consider new development projects.

Poverty Assessments

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries her Department conducted participatory poverty assessments in 1997–98; and in which it plans to in 1998–99. [39187]

Clare Short: We supported a participatory poverty assessment in 1997–98 in Kenya, and commenced work on a participatory poverty assessment in Egypt. In 1998–99 we are committed to supporting national level participatory poverty assessments in Pakistan and Uganda, and to carrying out one for urban poverty in the state of Andhra Pradesh in India. Work on the participatory poverty assessment in Egypt is continuing. Work on the Poverty and Inequality Report in South Africa (for which the participatory poverty assessment which we supported has been a major component) has been ongoing throughout this period.

Drug Smuggling (Caribbean)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which Caribbean countries her Department is currently providing assistance to combat drug smuggling; and at what estimated cost. [39177]

Clare Short: We are providing assistance to all Caribbean countries, including the Overseas Territories, as part of the Caribbean Drugs Initiative (CDI). This is an EU/UNDCP co-ordinated initiative aimed at combating the drugs trade which involves widely based support for Governments in the region. The Initiative aims to include improved planning at national level, law enforcement, demand reduction, treatment and rehabilitation. This programme is the most ambitious and comprehensive attempt so far to tackle the drugs problem in the region.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced at the Caribbean Forum in February that we have earmarked £7.5 million as DFID's contribution to the Caribbean Drugs Initiative (CDI). This will be used to help build capacity at the local level in police and customs in some of the more vulnerable Eastern Caribbean countries.

International Development Act

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has held on proposals for a new international development act; and if she will make a statement. [39188]

Clare Short: During preparation of the White Paper on International Development we received a number of representations supporting a new development act.

As we said in the White Paper and my Departmental Report, the Government are committed to consulting further on the desirability of a new act.

South Africa

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the estimated cost of her Department's support for the pilot land reform programme in the Republic of South Africa. [39179]

Clare Short: We have been assisting the Republic of South Africa with its land reform programme since 1995. Our support aims to help them to devise and test efficient, equitable and replicable means of transferring land to the rural poor. The expenditure for this pilot programme amounted to around £2 million to March 1998, and we expect to spend in total over £5 million over the next two years. The EU has also committed over £6 million to the programme, to which Britain's contribution is approximately 15 per cent.

Civil Service Reform Projects

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries her Department is currently funding civil service reform projects; and at what estimated cost. [39178]

Clare Short: Commitments of development support for civil service reform since 1995–96 have been as follows:

£000

Country	Commitment
Anguilla	190
Baltic States	716
Bulgaria	750
Colombia	400
Czech Republic	185
Ethopia	120
Ghana	5,000
Grenada	240
Hungary	534
Indonesia	670
Jamaica	2,000
Kenya	628
Lesotho	660
Malawi	474
Mexico	110
Montserrat	70
Namibia	701
Poland	967
Sierra Leone	1,200
Slovak Republic	539
South Africa	4,840
Tanzania	3,125
Uganda	802
Ukraine	165
West Bank/Gaza	770
Zambia	160
Zimbabwe	235

Determining the precise current status of these activities would involve consultation with DFID offices worldwide and involve disproportionate expense.

Central and Eastern Europe

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she will publish the results of her Department's survey of the extent of poverty in Central and Eastern Europe. [39183]

Clare Short: A literature review has been carried out for my Department by the University of Warwick. There are no plans at present to publish it, but it is available from Dr. Simon Clarke at the University.

Zimbabwe

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions her Department's officials have held with the Government of Zimbabwe about land reform; and if she will make a statement. [39165]

Clare Short: Officials held discussions with the Zimbabwean delegation to the recent conference on land reform in Zimbabwe at the University of London, and keep in contact with the Government and other stakeholders in Zimbabwe. I also met with the Finance Minister in the margins of the World Bank Spring meeting.

Financial Reform Projects

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries her

Department proposes to promote replication of the Shanghai Municipal Financial Reform Project in 1998–99. [39184]

Clare Short: We have no current plans to promote replication of the Shanghai Municipal Finance Reform project although we will draw on the positive experience of this project in developing proposals in other countries. Opportunities for replication in China will be discussed with the Chinese Government as part of a project review later this year.

Land Tenure Group

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the members of her Department's Land Tenure Group. [39180]

Clare Short: This Group is an internal Working Group of officials in my Department chaired by the Head of Natural Resources Policy and Advisory Department. An initial comparative study prepared for the Group by the Natural Resources Institute was published last month; a copy is being placed in the Library.

Centre for Humanitarian Aid

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to fund the Centre for Humanitarian Aid's Moscow newspaper, BEZDNA. [38600]

Clare Short: My Department does not provide direct funding for Russian newspapers. We have no plans to support BEZDNA. But we have engaged "The Big Issue in Scotland" to provide technical assistance to a similar street newspaper which benefits the homeless in St. Petersburg called "Na Dye" ("The Depths"). We are considering how the experience gained from this project might be extended to other regions in Russia.

Indonesia (Forest Fires)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what help and assistance she is giving to the Government of Indonesia to contain and extinguish forest fires. [38978]

Clare Short: We have provided, through the United Nations, the services of a fire-fighting and logistics expert for a 2 month period. In addition officials from my Department will be participating in a United Nations meeting on 20 and 21 April which will examine the most effective methods to deal with the fires and will also discuss possible joint efforts of the international community to assist—including the European Union and United Nations agencies. For the longer term it is important that the Government of Indonesia tackles the underlying causes of these fires: we are supporting work on appropriate forest policy and regulation through practical field experience.

Refugee Health

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what consultations she has had about the provisions of the forthcoming field manual to be published by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Population Fund on the subject of reproductive health in refugee situations; and what response she made. [38637]

Clare Short: Officials have been consulted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on a draft manual on Reproductive Health in Refugee Situations. We have highlighted the importance we attach to appropriate standards of care in the provision of all health services, taking account of the dangers to health faced by individuals who are seeking care.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what was the United Nations' budget for the health needs of refugees, per refugee, for (a) the emergency phase and (b) the post-emergency phase of refugee situations in each of the last 10 years; and what are the projected figures for the next three years. [38641]

Clare Short: A full breakdown along the lines requested is not available. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which is responsible for most UN expenditure on refugees, has provided the following figures on the amount of its annual budget spent on health for the last five years.

Year	Total budget US$ millions	Health budget US$ millions	Health budget as percentage of total
1994	1,320	106.1	8
1995	1,301.4	96.6	7.4
1996	1,358.2	83.8	6.2
1997	1,214.4	70.3	5.8
1998	1,123.7	51.1	4.5

UNHCR is not able to provide projected figures for the next three years.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the principal causes of mortality in order of prevalence in those refugee camps to which her Department provides assistance. [38642]

Clare Short: Globally the principal causes of mortality in refugee situations, in order of prevalence, are diarrhoea, acute respiratory infection and malaria. The specific prevalence is dependent upon the area in which a given camp is situated.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what meetings officials in her Department (a) have had and (b) plan to have with NGOs to discuss the use of manual vacuum aspiration for elective abortions in refugee camps. [38639]

Clare Short: My Officials maintain regular dialogue with a large number of non governmental organisations working in the field of reproductive health in refugee situations. These discussions underscore the duty of providers of reproductive health services to ensure that quality health care is provided, making use of technologies that are safe and appropriate to the setting. The subject of manual vacuum aspiration for elective abortions was not raised at a recent discussion with representatives of over twenty agencies active in the reproductive health field; though informal representations received more recently from personnel working for three non governmental organisations have been received and taken up with the UNHCR.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funding from independent sources was received by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in each of the last 10 years; and what assessment she has made of the extent to which such sources are also involved in funding population control activities. [38640]

Clare Short: UNHCR receives voluntary contributions from many sources. The table gives a breakdown of contributions received for 1994–1997.

US$ million

Year	Governmental	Inter-governmental	Private	Total
1994	791.8	234.7	29.1	1,055.6
1995	754.2	225.4	16.7	996.3
1996	809.8	147.7	12.4	969.9
1997	679.9	117.9	8.8	806.6

No assessment has been made of the extent to which such sources are involved in reproductive health care. UNHCR seeks to provide comprehensive reproductive health care within primary health care programmes and engages no population control activities.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make it her policy to support programmes to protect women in refugee camps from pressures to use inappropriate post-coital and abortion techniques; and if she will make a statement. [38645]

Clare Short: It is my Department's policy to support programmes that offer all women and men essential health care, including reproductive health care, information and services, that responds to their demands and offers them informed choices. My view is that women in refugee camps are entitled to free and informed choice in line with best medical practice.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations her Department has recently received about the use of manual vacuum aspiration for performing abortions in refugee camps; whether her Department issues guidance to refugee workers about complications arising from the use of such techniques in refugee camps and other non-sterile environments; and if she will make a statement. [38636]

Clare Short: My Department has received comments from personnel who work with three non governmental organisations on a draft manual on Reproductive Health in Refugee Situations which is being prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). They have questioned sections of the manual which relate to procedures for managing incomplete abortions, or miscarriages, experienced by women in refugee situations. We have conveyed these concerns to UNHCR.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) defines international standards for safety of elective and emergency gynaecological procedures and this guidance is of course available to refugee workers.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the extent of the compliance of the distribution of post coital contraception in refugee camps with the terms of the safety information provided by the manufacturers; and if she will make a statement. [38644]

Clare Short: The World Health Organisation defines standards for the appropriate provision of emergency contraception in all settings. It is our assessment that all women should have access to the information, services and commodities that they need to have children by choice, and be able to use them safely.

EU Aid

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representation she has made to the World Bank, IMF, regional development banks and other OECD aid donors about the increasing share of international aid accounted for by the EU and its member states and the decreasing share accounted for by others; and if she will make a statement. [38378]

Clare Short: We, and other donors have agreed an International Development Strategy which acknowledges that, to make progress towards its goals, the international community needs to sustain and increase the volume of development assistance. We hold discussions with other donors on aid levels, and respective contributions, mainly in the course of replenishment negotiations for Lomé, IDA and the Regional Banks, and in discussions with the Development Assistance Committee of the OECD on reviews of individual donor programmes, most recently that of the United States.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received on the effects of monetary union on (a) UK and (b) EU official development assistance; and if she will make a statement. [38536]

Clare Short: I have received no such representations.

Children (War Areas)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much financial aid has been donated to international funds for the protection of children in war areas in the last year. [37369]

Clare Short: It is not possible to provide separate details for our support to protection of children from our overall support to international organisations working in war areas. My support for protection work was £37.8 million (preliminary estimate) in financial year 1997/98. This funded a variety of programmes run by the International Committee of the Red Cross, United Nations Children's Fund, UN High Commissioner for Refugees, UN Department for Humanitarian Affairs/Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the UN Secretary General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. In addition, we have supported many projects managed by non governmental organisations who are working with vulnerable communities in war areas.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Ships Lost at Sea

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what statutory or other authority a High Court judge can exercise the power to look into the reasons for the loss of a ship at sea. [38446]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In circumstances where the Secretary of State orders a re-hearing of a Formal Investigation which took place in England or Wales, Section 269(2) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1995 enables him to order that re-hearing to take place in the High Court as an alternative to re-hearing before a Wreck Commissioner.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the powers of a wreck commissioner and assessors when inquiring into the loss of a ship in respect of (a) ruling on the scope of an inquiry within its terms of reference, (b) deciding whether evidence should be given on oath, who should be called to give evidence and whether the civil or criminal rules of evidence should apply, (c) awarding of witness expenses and of costs to or against any party, (d) deciding on the relevance and admissibility of evidence, and (e) reaching a conclusion on the reasons for the loss and making recommendations arising from it; and under what statutory or other authority they exercise these powers. [38441]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is given.

(a) The questions to be raised at a Formal Investigation are determined by the Attorney-General;

(b) The procedure to be appointed is in general a matter for the discretion of the Wreck Commissioner who may hold a preliminary meeting to give directions as to procedure. Witnesses are called initially on behalf of the Attorney-General and then by the other parties.

(c) Costs of the investigation and of the parties, and the question by whom such costs are to be paid are in the discretion of the Wreck Commissioner.

(d) Relevance and admissibility of evidence are matters for the Commissioner, although affidavits, statutory declarations and other written evidence are admissible unless the Commissioner considers it unjust for such evidence to be admitted.

(e) These are matters for the Wreck Commissioner. The Assessors are required to sign the report with or without reservations or to state in writing their reasons for dissent.

This is a summary of the powers which are exercised under Sections 268–270 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1995, and the Merchant Shipping (Formal Investigation) Rules 1985 as amended (SI 1985 No. 1001 amended by SI 1990 No. 123) to which reference should be made for more detail of the powers and procedures.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the powers of a High Court judge when inquiring into the loss of a ship; and how they differ from those of a wreck commissioner and assessors in respect of (a) ruling on the scope of an inquiry within its terms of reference; (b) deciding who should be called to give evidence, whether evidence should be given on oath, and whether civil or criminal rules of evidence should apply, (c) awarding of witness expenses and costs to or against any party, (d) deciding on the relevance and admissibility of evidence and (e) reaching a conclusion on the reasons for the loss and making recommendation arising from it. [38440]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Where a re-hearing has been Ordered to take place in the High Court the matter is assigned to the Queen's Bench Division, Admiralty Court and the Judge exercises wide powers of that Court set out in Orders 55, 57 and 77 of the Rules of the Supreme Court as to the issues identified by my hon. Friend. The powers of a Wreck Commissioner are the subject of my answer today to a separate question from my hon. Friend.

Waste Disposal

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in which local authorities in the North West Region landraising was assessed to be the best practical environmental option for waste disposal in each of the last three years. [38468]

Angela Eagle: No one form of waste treatment can be identified as the best practicable environmental option for all waste streams in any given area. Properly engineered and licensed landraising remains one option. Policy Planning Guidance note No. 10 on waste disposal and management, which will detail the relevant considerations that local authorities must take into account when addressing this issue, is due to be published later this year. Meanwhile, the draft waste local plans of the authorities in the north west region, which are currently under discussion, include their intended use of landfill/landraising.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which local authorities in the North West have published maps for areas of search for new landfill/landraising sites for non-inert wastes in each of the last three years; and which he expects to publish such plans in 1998–99. [38465]

Angela Eagle: Although the Government Office for the North West maintains copies of draft waste local plans, unitary development plans etc. for local authorities in the North West region, it would involve disproportionate expense to collate the information in the form requested. This can be obtained directly from the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what evidence he has evaluated of leakage of toxic materials from waste dumped in porous limestone quarries; [38873]

(2) what investigations his Department has carried out on the effects of waste-tipping in limestone quarries. [38875]

Angela Eagle: The disposal of waste in landfills is controlled under the waste management licensing system in force under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The objective of the licensing system is to ensure that waste is disposed of in a manner which protects the environment and human health. The Environment Agency are responsible for the consideration of applications for licences to dispose of waste in landfills and the supervision of licences which are issued.

My Department published in 1993 the results of research that it commissioned from WRC (formerly the Water Research Centre) on the pollution characteristics of landfills in quarries in magnesian limestone areas. The research report was entitled "Monitoring for leachate migration from landfills in Magnesian Limestone quarries at old Wingate and Joint Stocks, Durham: 1984–1992". I have sent a copy of the report to my hon. Friend and arranged for copies to be deposited in the Library of the House.

In 1995 the Department's evaluation of this and other research was incorporated into the recommendations of Waste Management Paper 26B, "Landfill Design, Construction and Operational Practice". This paper indicates that former quarries may be used for the landfilling of waste provided that the design incorporates adequate arrangements to contain and monitor leakage.

Rail Accident, Glynde

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the conclusions of the investigation into the recent railway accident at Glynde station; and what action has been taken subsequently. [38714]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The conclusions of the Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate investigation into the accident at Glynde Railway Station, East Sussex on 20 April 1997 were that serious breaches of health and safety legislation had taken place, resulting in the prosecution of Amec Rail Ltd.

On 4 November 1997, Amec Rail Ltd. pleaded guilty to two charges: failing to ensure the health and safety of their employees and failing to ensure the safety of persons not in their employment. Amec Rail were fined £15,000 on each charge and ordered to pay costs of £2,007.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the roadworks whose completion will benefit road access to the Millennium Dome, giving the expected completion date in each case. [38718]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Millennium Experience will be a car-free event, but it is essential to secure good access for the traffic that has yet to get to the Dome such as coaches, taxis, disabled drivers and delivery vehicles. The following road improvements are taking place.

A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road

The road is planned to be opened in Autumn 1999.

A102(M) Access Improvements

Works are due to commence in July 1998 for completion in June 1999.

Blackwall Tunnel

Work to refurbish the ventilation system for the southbound Blackwall tunnel is due for the completion in summer 1999. An exit ramp to divert overheight lorries from the northbound entrance to the tunnel was completed in October 1997.

Primary Route Network Re-signing

Scheme replace the green backed Primary network signing in London. Tenders for the East London sector affecting routes to Greenwich have been invited with completion programmed for Autumn 1999.

Woolwich Road Improvement Scheme

The London Borough of Greenwich are receiving funding to upgrade to dual carriageway, the remaining single carriageway section of the Woolwich Road (A206) Completion is planned for May 1999.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans for improvements to the transport infrastructure in preparation for the opening of the Millennium Experience. [37437]

Ms Glenda Jackson: By the Millennium, there will be a variety of attractive and convenient means of travel available for visitors to the Dome which involve new and improved transport infrastructure as part of an integrated approach to provide access to the Millennium Experience. The following improvements are planned:

The construction of the Jubilee Line Extension (JLE) with a major new station by the gates of the Dome.

A new bus station next to the JLE station with bus routes from several directions.

A new pier for river services to central London (and historic Greenwich).

A dedicated bus service linking the North Kent rail line at Charlton Station to the Dome.

Completion of the A12 Hackney to M11 Link road.

Replacement of green-backed Primary Route Network signs on east London routes to Greenwich.

A refurbished ventilation system for the southbound Blackwall tunnel. An exit ramp to divert overheight lorries from the northbound entrance to the tunnel was completed in October 1997.

New road links from the A102(M) onto local roads on the Greenwich Peninsula to provide access for those who need to come by road (such as coach parties and disabled drivers).

A new riverside cycle/walk way linking Greenwich Town Centre to the Dome, plus facilities for visitors to leave their bicycles and motorbikes securely

A new cable car system is planned by a private company to cross the Thames.

A purpose built coach park at the Dome site with driver and passenger facilities.

Former Coalfields

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what priority the Planning Inspectorate gives to planning applications on brownfield sites in former coalmining communities. [38654]

Mr. Raynsford: The determination of planning applications is the responsibility in the first instance of local planning authorities. In the case of planning applications that have been called in for determination by my right hon. Friend, no one form of development proposal is given priority over another.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the Coalfields Task Force will report on its programme of action; [38656]

(2) what priority his Department gives to employment creation measures in former coalfield communities. [38655]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister established the Coalfields Task Force last October to consider what more might be done to assist communities affected by pit closures. Their report will be published in May. In response to their recommendations on employment creation and other issues, the Deputy Prime Minister will launch a programme of action for the coalfields at a National Coalfields Conference to be held on Wednesday 24 June at Ollerton Miners' Welfare in North Nottinghamshire.

European Regional Statistics

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings he has had with representatives of the European Commission to discuss the adoption of the English regions for the purposes of producing European regional statistics; and if he will make a statement. [39259]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the letter from the Director of the Office for National Statistics to my noble Friend Lord Bruce of Donington, published on 2 February 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 82, following his Question to my noble Friend Lord McIntosh, which reports progress on the adoption by the European Union of the Government Offices for the Regions for the classification of statistics for English regions.

Planning Policy Guidance

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to develop economic instruments to support planning policy guidance. [39000]

Mr. Raynsford: As was set out in a policy statement in February, we are seeking to open up the debate about the scope for using economic instruments to help achieve our planning objectives. The scope for detailed proposals has not yet been determined, and final decisions on taxation are, of course, a matter for the Chancellor.

Connex South Central

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 2, if he will make a statement on the issues raised in the 306 letters received by his Department about rail services provided by Connex South Central. [39297]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A wide range of issues has been raised in correspondence, including performance, fares, service patterns and quality, capacity, investment and proposals to extend the franchise. The Franchising Director is responsible for overseeing Connex South Central's performance and managing their franchise contract.

Canals

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on the re-opening of canals with the potential for recreational use; what sources of public funding are available for such projects; and if he will make a statement. [38794]

Angela Eagle: The Government recognise the economic, environmental and amenity benefits that inland waterways can bring and are keen to maximise the full potential of the canal network. Our policy on upgrading British Waterways' canals is that this should not add to their existing liabilities: this usually involves third party funding for the extra costs of maintaining a navigable canal.

Volunteers and the many canal restoration societies play a valuable part in restoring canals. We have provided financial help to a range of canal restoration projects through the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund, Land Reclamation Programme grant and the Environmental Action Fund. Projects are also eligible for funding from the various Lottery distribution boards, from local authorities and from Europe. We look forward to receiving the report from the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council on their prioritisation of restoration projects which should ensure that available funding is more effectively targeted.

Unified Business Rate

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will allow new businesses to pay 25 per cent. of the unified business rates in their first years, 50 per cent. in the second and 75 per cent. in the third year; [39033]

(2) if he will reduce the unified business rate where the owner or proprietor lives on the premises in lieu of council tax. [39031]

Mr. Raynsford: On 30 March we published our consultation paper "Modernising local government: Business Rates", setting out our proposals on the future of non-domestic rates. We indicated there our willingness to consider reducing the rate bills of small businesses, and invited views by 1 June on the approach to be adopted.

Bye-laws

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures his Department follows when considering an application to introduce a bye-law from (a) a district, (b) a borough, (c) a town and (d) a parish council; and what mechanisms his Department has for verifying the application. [38734]

Mr. Raynsford: In all cases, my Department ensures that an application meets the stringent tests as to the validity of byelaws which have been laid down by the courts, namely, that a byelaw should be within the power of the enabling legislation, that it is not repugnant to the general law, nor uncertain nor unreasonable.

In verifying an application, my Department ensures that it is accompanied by a copy of the council's resolution; the sealed byelaws; the draft byelaws previously approved by the Department; a copy of the newspaper(s) containing the notice; the proper officer's certificate as to deposit of a copy of the byelaws; copies of objections, if any, received by the council and confirmation of compliance with additional requirements of Local Acts (if any).

Parking Restrictions (Schools)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make parking restrictions outside school entrances mandatory, allowing local authorities powers of variation. [39198]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Local traffic authorities already have responsibility and the appropriate powers for deciding where, whether and when parking outside school entrances should be prohibited, and whether "Keep clear" markings should be advisory or mandatory. We have no plans to change this.

Public Transport (Disabled Access)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to provide funding for making buses accessible for people with disabilities. [38760]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. Bus manufacturers and operators are already recognising the commercial benefits of accessibility not only for disabled people but also for those passengers travelling with prams or baby buggies.

Government do provide funding to local authorities through the Local Transport Settlement in order to improve the physical environment, such as pavements and bus stops to provide better access to existing buses.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to set a deadline for all buses to be accessible for people with disabilities. [38761]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently consulting with disability organisations, industry and local authorities on our proposed timetable for implementation of the bus and coach provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

We have suggested that new large single deck buses should be accessible from 1 January 2000 and all large single deck buses by 2015, all new double deck buses from 1 January 2002 with an end date of 2017 for all double deck buses to be accessible. For coaches and small buses we are proposing 1 January 2005 for new vehicles and 2020 for total compliance of all vehicles.

We will be consulting on our final proposals in the form of draft regulations when we have considered the responses to the current consultation exercise.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on encouraging implementation of the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 with reference to public transport for people with disabilities. [38763]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to comprehensive civil rights for disabled people. Accessible public transport, within the framework of an integrated transport policy, is fundamentally important to delivering this commitment.

We have drawn up detailed proposals on the transport provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act covering bus and coach, rail and licensed taxis. We are consulting with disability organisations, industry and local authorities both on the technical details and on the timetable for implementation.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans there are to adapt London Underground stations to provide access for people with disabilities. [38762]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All new stations on the Jubilee Line Extension will be fully accessible to people with disabilities. London Transport also has plans for developing a step-free network of around 60 key stations. The Government have asked LT to look at how these plans can be accelerated by the extra funding which the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 20 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1539–42.

Eurostar

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he will verify the accuracy of the Eurostar traffic forecasts submitted to him by those organisations bidding to (a) construct the Channel Tunnel rail link and (b) run the Eurostar franchise. [39002]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Any forecasts produced by these parties are done for their own purposes and are not for endorsement by the Government. The Government have however commissioned an independent view based on information provided by the parties.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the timetable for the establishment of a Eurostar service from Birmingham to the Continent; and if he will make a statement. [38619]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The provision of these services is the responsibility of Eurostar (UK) Limited which is a subsidiary of London & Continental Railways Limited (LCR). LCR have assured me that Eurostar (UK) Limited are continuing to work with Railtrack in search of a solution to the continuing technical difficulties of operating Regional Eurostar rolling stock on parts of the existing network. These difficulties have prevented the issue of the safety clearances that are required before passenger services can be operated. LCR say that progress is being made, but regret that it is likely to be some months before the safety issues can be fully resolved. In the meantime LCR tell me that the traffic projections for these services are being considered as part of the forecasts for the business referred to in my answer of today to the hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway).

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what expenditure his Department has incurred on the provision of a sleeping car service to run to Europe, via the Channel Tunnel, for the regions of Britain; and if he will make a statement. [38618]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The rolling stock for this service was procured in 1992 by European Night Services Limited (ENS) using a lease purchase facility. ENS is a joint venture company owned by Eurostar (UK) Limited along with the national railways of France, Germany and Holland. Whilst there has been very little actual public financing of this venture, Eurostar (UK) Limited's share of the capital value of the lease was scored as public expenditure when the company was in the public sector. The liabilities of Eurostar (UK) Ltd under the lease purchase facility are the subject of a Government Guarantee which was notified to Parliament under the normal procedures in 1996. If this Guarantee were to be called the Government's actual exposure is likely to be in the order of £105 million.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applicants to the boards of regional development agencies are under the age of (a) 25 years, (b) 30 years and (c) 35 years; and if he will make a statement. [38969]

Mr. Caborn: Applications for Regional Development Agency board membership have been received from a variety of sources and full monitoring details are not yet available. Of the applications made to the Government Offices, 4 are from people under 25 years, 6 are between 25 and 29 years and 20 are between 30 and 34 years. I will write to the hon. Member when the full information is available.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to ensure that the boards of regional development agencies include young people; and if he will make a statement. [38968]

Mr. Caborn: The information pack provided to candidates made it clear that service on the board of a Regional Development Agency may be a useful development opportunity for young people. In identifying board members, consideration will be given to candidates who have demonstrated significant potential early in their careers.

Environmental Statements

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he requires the Environmental Statement submitted as part of an application for any project which will have an effect on transport volumes or patterns to include (a) an assessment of the number of journeys, by any means of transport, which are generated and saved, (b) an estimate of the projected distances of those journeys, and (c) an assessment of the total increase or reduction in the emission of greenhouse gases and other pollutants caused as a result. [38980]

Mr. Raynsford: The requirements for the content of Environmental Statements are set by the provisions of Annex III of Council Directive 85/337/EEC on the assessment of certain public and private projects on the environment (the EIA Directive). These requirements are implemented, in the main, through the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 (SI 1988 No. 1199). Developers are required to describe the likely significant effects of the project on the environment and to describe the forecasting methods used. To assist developers, the Department issued a Good Practice Guide on the preparation of Environmental Statements in 1995. This includes guidance on assessing the impacts on air and climate and of traffic and transport.

National Parks

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy towards the use of the Sandford Principle in protecting national parks. [38981]

Angela Eagle: Section 62 of the Environment Act 1995 reflects the Sandford Principle. It places a general duty on all relevant authorities to have regard to National Park purposes and, if it appears that there is a conflict between them, requires that greater weight be attached to the purpose of conserving and enhancing the natural beauty, wildlife and cultural heritage of the National Park. My Department's policy is to promote this legislation.

County Structure Plans

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the applicability and enforcement of county structure plans drawn up before the announcement of the Government's policy on the proportion of new dwellings to be on brownfield sites. [38956]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, columns 530–31. Section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires all decisions on planning matters to be made in accordance with the adopted development plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

Government Planning Guidance has for many years required local authorities to make full and effective use of previously developed land for new development, both when drawing up their development plans and in deciding planning applications. The recent statement reinforces this position. There are at the moment no regional or local land recycling targets in development plans, although authorities will be working towards developing these in the next round of regional planning guidance.

Home Buying Task Group

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Ministerial Task Group on home buying to report. [38825]

Mr. Raynsford: We expect to make an announcement in the autumn.

Shipping Working Group

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Shipping Working Group assessing measures to assist the United Kingdom shipping industry to report. [38827]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Shipping Working Group submitted its report to my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister last month.

London Water Table

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to arrest the rising water table in London; what impact rising water levels are having on subterranean structures; and if he will make a statement. [38747]

Angela Eagle: Thames Water plc are currently developing a strategy for alleviating groundwater levels across the area of London most likely to be affected. We expect to receive their report in about a month's time, and shall then be able to consider how to take the strategy forward. The only subterranean structures so far affected are certain parts of the Underground network. London Underground have considerable experience of dealing with groundwater and are taking action as the need arises.

Cosmetic Surgery Clinics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) percentage and (b) number of private cosmetic surgery clinics were inspected in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [39034]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is unavailable. The Health and Safety Executive does not record its contacts with duty holders at this level of detail.

Mink

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to classify mink as a pest. [38878]

Angela Eagle: There are no plans to classify the mink as a pest species.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to control the spread of wild mink in the United Kingdom. [38877]

Angela Eagle: Mink are controlled in the UK, by and large, by individual landowners.

In the 1960s Agriculture Departments carried out an eradication scheme by means of an extensive trapping campaign. The campaign ceased in 1970 when it was accepted that feral mink had become too well established and widespread for eradication to be possible. There are no plans at present for such a scheme to be revived, as any such campaign would be very unlikely to succeed.

Development Land

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for new ways of taxing development land to promote balanced development between greenfield and brownfield sites. [38872]

Mr. Raynsford: As was set out in a policy statement in February, we are seeking to open up the debate about the scope for using economic instruments to help achieve our planning objectives, including the possibility of a greenfield tax. The scope for detailed proposals has not yet been determined, and final decisions on taxation are, of course, a matter for the Chancellor.

Planning

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evaluation his Department has carried out of the benefits of section 106 planning agreements. [38871]

Mr. Raynsford: As announced in our January 1998 Policy Statement "Modernising Planning", we are holding seminars this month with a number of stakeholders to evaluate these agreements and to discuss options for changing policy.

Subsidence

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for making compensation available to home-owners affected by subsidence caused by limestone quarrying. [38874]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no proposals to compensate home-owners for subsidence caused by limestone quarrying.

Subsidence damage to houses is generally covered under normal household insurance whatever the cause. The only statutory compensation scheme is for subsidence due to coal mining under the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991, as amended by the Coal Industry Act 1994. In other cases of subsidence damage, it is open to home-owners and/or their insurers to take action in Common Law against the person who caused the damage. It would not be appropriate for the Government to act as insurer of last resort in such cases.

Liverpool Lifeboat Station

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the implications of the possible closure of the lifeboat station at Liverpool; and if he will make a statement. [39012]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No representations have been received on the possible closure of Liverpool lifeboat station. The Royal National Lifeboat Institution state they have no plans to close any lifeboat station in the Liverpool area.

Nuclear Waste

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will (a) impose restrictions on and (b) eliminate in the long-term the transportation of nuclear waste. [39048]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department implements and enforces appropriate regulations to ensure that all radioactive material, including nuclear waste, is transported safely. These regulations are subject to continuous review to ensure they are kept up-to-date and effective.

London Referendum Campaign

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what public funds are available for the London Referendum Campaign; and who may apply for them. [38738]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have made it clear that no public funds will be made available to groups campaigning on the London referendum.

London Mayor

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to set limits on election expenses for candidates for the London Mayoralty; and what statutory provision applies to the date on which election expenses are first incurred. [38736]

Mr. Raynsford: We said in our White Paper, "A Mayor and Assembly for London", that there will need to be a limit on the amount that candidates for the Mayor and Assembly can spend. Subject to a "Yes" vote in the referendum on 7 May we will introduce legislation to establish the Greater London Authority. The legislation will set the level of these expenses and we will consult the Association of London Government before taking decisions.

The date from which election expenses might first be incurred is not prescribed in statute.

Building Control Services

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure local authorities are able to compete on equal terms with the private sector for building control services contracts. [38741]

Mr. Raynsford: Wider competition between approved inspectors and local authority building control should be a stimulus to greater efficiency and higher standards of service to the customer. To help bring about this result, I am working to devolve the setting of charges for local authority building control to individual local authorities. I also wish to see arrangements put in place for setting and monitoring compliance with common standards of building control applicable across the public and private sectors. I therefore welcome the establishment by the Local Government Association, the Construction Industry Council and the Association of Corporate Approved Inspectors of a Steering Group to draw up recommended standards and monitoring arrangements.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received in respect of the provision of building control services by private contractors. [38740]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department receives letters from time to time about the performance of approved inspectors carrying out building control functions, as well as about the performance of local authority building control officers.

A46/47 Link Road

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the original side road orders for the Leicester A46/47 link road scheme have been superseded by temporary closure side road orders; and what factors underlay the length of time taken between the posting of the side orders and commencement of work. [38957]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The A46/47 link road is a local road for which Leicester City Council are the local highway authority. Following a public inquiry in 1995 the Side Roads Orders were confirmed in August 1997. Before implementing the authority of a Side Roads Order a local highway authority must ensure that there already exists, or they have provided, a reasonably convenient alternative to highways being stopped up by an authority of that Order. This often entails the making of temporary closure orders under the Traffic Regulation Act 1984. Temporary closure orders under this Act may also be required to enable some construction works to be carried out. I understand that Leicester City Council have recently advertised their intention for some temporary closures to enable construction works. Under the Traffic Regulation Act highway authorities must give not less than 7 days' notice of their intention to make such temporary closures, which includes dates of commencement and duration of the closure.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department has taken to ensure that the supplementary credit approval awarded to Leicester City Council for the construction of the A46/47 link road scheme has been used (a) effectively and (b) within the time period allowed. [38958]

Ms Glenda Jackson: When my Department issues supplementary credit approvals (SCA) for a scheme such as the A46/47 link road the certificate that formalises the arrangement makes it clear that the resources are to be used only on the named scheme. It is for the Audit Commission to determine in due course whether an authority has made proper use of all the resources it receives under the Transport Policies and Programme system. The continuation of funding to a participating authority under that system is dependent on my Department's receipt of satisfactory annual audit certificates. SCA are issued for a specific financial year. Local authorities know that if they are unable to use the resources fully in that year they must surrender the unused portion for reallocation. It is a function of the audit procedure to verify that authorities have fulfilled this requirement.

Valuations (Commercial Properties)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the regulations concerning the valuation arrangements for commercial properties which include domestic areas within the overall property. [39199]

Mr. Raynsford: None. Where a property is used for both commercial and domestic purposes, the rateable value is based only on the commercial use. It does not include the value of the property as living accommodation. This is dealt with entirely separately, through a Council Tax assessment.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish his White Paper on the UK strategy to meet the target of 20 per cent. reduction on carbon dioxide emissions in 1990. [38985]

Angela Eagle: The Government plan to publish a consultation paper on climate change this summer. This will focus on policy options for meeting our legally binding target from Kyoto, but also look at measures that would move beyond that towards our aim of a 20 per cent. reduction in CO_2 emissions. We are inviting views from all sectors throughout this consultation process.

Rail Subsidies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the next five years the Government subsidy to be paid to (a) Railtrack and (b) each train operating company. [37919]

Ms Glenda Jackson [pursuant to her reply, 8 April 1998, c. 291–92]: The information in the table was incorrect, the following table gives the correct figures.

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the access to set-up funding for organisations acting as deliverers of the Environmental Task Force options of the New Deal to ensure adequate investment in infrastructure. [35908]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Chief Executive of the Employment Service recently announced a scheme whereby voluntary organisations, including those delivering ETF provision, can have some of their first year's contract value in advance, to meet set-up costs, immediately a contract is signed. The maximum amount available is whichever is the lower of £30,000 or 20 per cent. of the first year's expected contract value.

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken to increase the national profile of the voluntary sector and Environmental Task Force options of the New Deal. [35927]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Our national advertising campaign features a range of voluntary and environmental organisations and from April will include two new television commercials to specifically promote these options. Inquiries generated in this way are answered by the New Deal Information Line and Website, for example by sending information packs. Factsheets and other publicity material aimed at both clients and option providers are also available through Jobcentres and local partner organisations. The New Deal Task Force is also working to raise the profile of these options.

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 479, if he will publish the set of environmental objectives developed by his Department, against which Environmental Task Force projects will be assessed. [35951]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The list of environmental objectives, developed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, against which Environment Task Force (ETF) bids will be assessed was published as an Annex to the specification for the ETF, which was issued by the Employment Service to organisations wishing to bid to deliver ETF provision.

A copy of the list has been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) she and (b) other Ministers within her Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23763]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is not available in the form requested. However, the following information is available:

Departmental Pay

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people employed by (a) her Department and (b) the agencies for which her Department is responsible earn (i) less than £3.20 per hour, (ii) between £3.20 and £3.60 per hour, (iii) between £3.60 and £4 per hour and (iv) between £4 and £4.62 per hour. [30755]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

	(i)	(ii)	(iii)	(iv)
Non Industrial Staff[1]	81	1,656	555	1,797
Industrial Staff
Department	—	—	21	177
Agencies	—	—	—	960

[1] The split of non-industrial staff between Departments and agencies is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of her officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31171]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments for 1997 is as follows:

(a) 1,563

(b) 305

(i) 406 (21.7%)

(ii) 229 (12.3%)

Information relating to United Kingdom conferences attended by Department of the Environment Officials is not included as this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list each information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contract, with its value, concluded by her Department and its agencies for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–2001 and (e) 2001–2002. [32019]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council were held in 1997. [33592]

Marjorie Mowlam: Three: on 7 February, 8 May and 14 November. These were meetings of the Education and Culture Sub-Committee. There were also 3 meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference. The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference was established under the framework of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council.

Radio Telefis Eireann

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the cost to United Kingdom public funds of the onward transmission of Radio Telefis Eireann into Northern Ireland; who will pay the costs incurred within the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement on the discussion of the matter at the Anglo-Irish Conference on 6 March. [34614]

Marjorie Mowlam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport is responsible for broadcasting policy. His officials and UK broadcasters are currently discussing with their Irish counterparts proposals to increase power to extend the coverage of RTE services within Northern Ireland. Before my right hon. Friend can agree to any such increased power transmissions, the necessary engineering work to protect UK services will have to be undertaken. The costs of any engineering work required in the UK which forms part of any UK-Irish agreement to extend RTE reception in Northern Ireland will be wholly funded by the Irish.

We discussed plans for the early extension of RTE transmission throughout Northern Ireland at the Intergovernmental conference meeting on 5 March.

Lawther Day Centre, Belfast

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the future use of the Lawther Day Centre in College Park Avenue, Belfast. [37159]

Mr. Worthington: I understand that the South and East Belfast Health and Social Services Trust is seeking planning approval to develop an Adolescent Resource Centre on this site which will provide a focus for its Adolescent Services and facilitate an improved inter-agency and multi-disciplinary approach to young people and their families.

Mobile Phones

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the maximum effective radiated power permitted from a mobile phone base station. [37097]

Mr. Worthington: I am advised by the Radio Communications Agency, which is the licensing authority for these operations, that the maximum effective radiated power permitted from a mobile phone base station should not exceed 30 dBW (decibel watts).

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the long-term effects of exposure to radiation from mobile phones and base stations. [37099]

Mr. Worthington: No specific research has been commissioned in relation to Northern Ireland. However, the Department of Health has commissioned two studies on biological effects of microwaves as part of its Radiation Protection Research Programme. The first is investigating the influence of radiation on learning ability and behaviour. The other is a laboratory study looking for biological responses from human cells in the electromagnetic radiation field. That Department is also contributing to the World Health Organisation's International Electromagnetic Field project, which includes the health effects of microwaves.

The Government obtain advice from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) on the risks to health of exposure to electromagnetic fields. NRPB's advice is that mobile phones and base stations currently operating in the United Kingdom comply with the recommended exposure limits.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of radioactive discharges from Sellafield on the health of people in Northern Ireland. [37104]

Mr. Worthington: None.

Mediation Network

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 27, under whose authority Mediation Network facilitates links between the RUC and others, (a) nationally and (b) internationally; with what activities relating to the RUC it has been involved; to whom the body is accountable in respect of Government funding received; and what accounts have been published. [37385]

Mr. Ingram: The Mediation Network is an independent association formed to develop alternative, non-violent approaches to conflicts and disputes in different settings in Northern Ireland. It therefore needs no authority other than the agreement of those it works with.

The Mediation Network has already worked with the Royal Ulster Constabulary training branch on the RUC's Community Awareness programme. The current project is intended to develop with the RUC, as service providers, and others ideas for the evolution of policing and community relations in Northern Ireland.

The Mediation Network is accountable to the Northern Ireland Community Relations Council for its financial assistance and the latter is in turn accountable to the Department of Finance and Personnel, by which it is funded under the Community Relations Programme.

The last published accounts for both the Mediation Network and for the Northern Ireland Community Relations Council cover the financial year ending 31 March 1997.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 27, what studies have been commissioned by her Department from Mediation Network, and what studies or recommendations have been offered to her Department by Mediation Network, in relation to the future structure or operation of the RUC; and if she will place a copy of such papers in the Library. [37380]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Office, through its Statistics and Research Branch, is currently part funding a Mediation Network project entitled 'Policing Our Divided Society'. This particular project was proposed by the Mediation Network in consultation with the RUC, and contributes to the RUC's Policing in Partnership strategy. The Mediation Network approached the Northern Ireland Office, amongst others, to seek funding.

The Mediation Network has identified the aim of the project as 'To Assist the Evolution of Policing and Community Relations in Northern Ireland'. Work will involve discussions with various groups about policing in Northern Ireland including with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, as the service providers.

The Mediation Network will produce a report for the NIO which summarises points of significance emerging from the process. In due course, a summary of the main conclusion will be published.

Peace Process (Public Relations)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding has been set aside for public relations exercises relating to a possible talks agreement; what PR companies are involved; what budget has been identified for the exercise; and if she will make a statement. [37382]

Marjorie Mowlam: My principal concern in this area is to ensure that the people of Northern Ireland have available to them all of the information which they need in order to take a decision on any agreement which may be reached, in a referendum.

Accordingly, I propose to make arrangements to have an agreement circulated as widely as possible to the people of Northern Ireland.

The total budget for printing and distribution of the agreement, the related costs of making known both its availability and the arrangements for the referendum cannot yet be predicted.

I have no proposals to involve any PR company in this work. Any advertising necessary to publicise arrangements for making the agreement available publicly will be handled by an advertising agency already contracted to the Northern Ireland Office for other ongoing work.

Sinn Fein

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 724–725, on Sinn Fein, if she will place a copy of the RUC Code Regulation in the Library. [37812]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC Code Regulation is a Confidential document and therefore cannot be made public.

Maze Prison

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents involving violent behaviour or assaults have been reported in each of the past four years in HMP Maze; how many complaints have been registered of assaults on prison officers; how many disciplinary charges have been initiated as a result; of these, how many charges led to further punishments; how many complaints have been registered as assaults on inmates; how many disciplinary charges were initiated as a result; and of these how many charges led to disciplinary action. [37679]

Mr. Ingram: There was a total of 67 incidents involving violent behaviour or assaults reported in HMP Maze 1994 to 1997. The total is broken down as follows:

1995—25
1996—18
1997—8

There have been a total of 208 complaints which have been registered as assaults on Prison Staff at HMP Maze, 179 disciplinary charges were initiated as a result, of which 38 charges led to further punishments.

There have been 26 complaints registered as assaults against inmates during the four years in question. 3 disciplinary charges were initiated as a result, but disciplinary action is still pending.

Prisoners (Remission)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the number of existing prisoners convicted of scheduled offences remaining in prison in each year until the last is released, assuming no new convictions, under (a) the current, (b) a 66 per cent. and (c) a 75 per cent. rate of remission. [37829]

Mr. Ingram: Statistical information in the precise form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I am nevertheless able to provide statistical information on a similar point which has been previously produced. The following table is based on prisoners serving determinate sentences of three years or more; held at Maghaberry or Maze for offences connected to terrorism; and who will be released after 30 April 1998.

Number of prisoners convicted of scheduled offences remaining in prison at the end of each year under current arrangements, 66% and 75% rates of remission

End of year	Current arrangements	66% remission	75% remission
1998	250	109	38
1999	182	59	9
2000	126	26	3
2001	84	8	2
2002	47	2	2
2003	31	2	1
2004	18	1	—
2005	8	1	—
2006	3	1	—
2007	1	—	—
2008	1	—	—
2009	1	—	—
2011	1	—	—
2012	—	—	—

Notes:

1. Current prisoners for whom 66% and 75% remission would mean prior or immediate release, are included in figures for 1998.
2. Determinate sentenced prisoners serving sentences of three years or more; held at Maghaberry or Maze for scheduled offences; and who will be released after 30 April 1998.
3. Excludes: Life Sentence prisoners and prisoners detained at Secretary of State's Pleasure; remand; and fine default prisoners.

Accident Treatment Costs

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the total cost of treating accidents and other injuries in Northern Ireland in the last 12 months. [37322]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The information requested is not available in the format requested.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the projected number of osteoporotic fractures in Northern Ireland in the next 12 months and the number of (a) orthopaedic beds and (b) days of hospitalisation required to treat them. [37334]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Services are not planned in the detailed way pre-supposed by this question and therefore no estimate of the numbers referred to are available. However, in 1996/97, a total of 96 persons with a primary diagnosis of osteoporotic fracture were treated as inpatients in Northern Ireland hospitals. This treatment involved 1,685 bed-days.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of visits and repeat visits to GPs in Northern Ireland occasioned by osteoporosis. [37306]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Information on the number of visits and repeat visits made to GPs about specific conditions is not collected centrally.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the cost of treating osteoporotic fractures in the last 12 months. [37323]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Based on the number of finished consultant episodes during 1996/97 in relation to osteoporotic fractures, expenditure amounted to approximately £582,000. The latter figures refer to inpatient episodes only.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the incidence of osteoporosis; and what estimate she has made of the cost of osteoporosis to the NHS in Northern Ireland in the last 12 months. [37314]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Information on the incidence of osteoporosis is not available centrally. The data available, however, show that, during the financial year 1996/97, 1,167 persons with a primary diagnosis of osteoporosis were treated as inpatients in Northern Ireland hospitals. Data are not collected in such a way that allows the cost of osteoporosis to the Health and Personal Social Services in Northern Ireland to be estimated.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many health boards have an osteoporosis strategy in place; and if she will list them. [37310]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The four Health and Social Services Boards are aware of the significance of this condition as a public health problem and are at various stages in the development of strategies; these include guidelines for the secondary prevention of osteoporosis, protocols for onward referral and treatment of patients with osteoporosis; and measures intended to prevent the occurrence of osteoporosis.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of (a) accidents and (b) orthopaedic hospital admissions in Northern Ireland are directly attributable to osteoporosis. [37327]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Data on (a) accidents are not collected in the form required. It is not therefore possible to answer the question. However, by way of information, in 1996/97, 145 (or 1 per cent.) of emergency inpatient admissions were assigned a primary diagnosis of osteoporosis.

With regard to (b) there are no orthopaedic hospitals in Northern Ireland. During 1996/97, a total of 39 (or 0.25 per cent.) persons with a primary or secondary diagnosis of osteoporosis were treated as inpatients in the Trauma & Orthopaedics (T&O) specialty in Northern Ireland hospitals.

Bill of Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will take steps to ensure that the terms of the UN Basic Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal and Summary Executions are included on the proposed Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. [37888]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 8 April 1998]: We will bear this in mind.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Computer Fraud

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to ensure that the Serious Fraud Office has the human and technical resources to tackle successfully computer fraud. [38979]

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office has a team of staff dedicated to deal with all computer-related issues on all cases: for example the seizure and processing of material during an investigation as well as presentation of material at trial.

If the SFO were to require a particular expertise or technical resource that was not available internally then a competitive arrangement for selecting the provider on value for money criteria would be put into operation.

Crown Business Communications

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Attorney-General if he authorised the employment of Crown Communications by the Director of Public Prosecutions. [38719]

The Attorney-General: I was aware that CPS management was considering how to handle the Glidwell Report and the Government's response to it with a view to informing their staff of the Government's decisions. I was not aware that Crown Business Communications were being considered for this purpose. Internal communications within the CPS are not my responsibility but that of CPS management subject to my general power of superintendence. I shall be considering the handling of the Glidwell Report with the Director of Public Prosecutions in due course.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total cost to the public purse of the employment of Crown Communications by the Director of Public Prosecutions. [38720]

The Attorney-General: Nothing. No contract has been signed between Crown Business Communications and the Crown Prosecution Service. If it is decided to use the company it will be paid for items of work only when they have been identified and agreed.

Thefts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from (a) his office and (b) the offices of the Crown Prosecution Service in the last five years indicating the approximate value of each item stolen. [37974]

The Attorney-General: I am able to provide the following information:

(a) A laptop computer worth approximately £700 was stolen from the Attorney-General's Office in July 1996. There is no record of any other theft of equipment in the period specified.

(b) Equipment stolen from the offices of the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last five financial years together with approximate values, is as follows:

	Non IT Equipment		IT Equipment

1995/96	14	4,327	22	22,035
1996/97	11	1,884	15	21,755
1997/98	2	1,200	1	2,200
Total	47	15,733	79	73,889

Full details of stolen CPS equipment is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) organisations and (b) individuals he has consulted concerning the Social Exclusion Unit; and if he will make a statement. [38291]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Officials in the Welsh Office have had informal discussions with a number of bodies in Wales about ways to construct an effective programme to tackle Social Exclusion. These include the Welsh Local Government Association, the Wales Council for Voluntary Action, Swansea City Council and the University of Glamorgan. We intend to publish proposals for formal consultation in early May.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to secure the future of post offices in rural Wales, with particular reference to Flintshire; and if he will make a statement. [38461]

Mr. Hain: The Government fully recognise the importance of the post office network, especially in rural areas, and are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices. In announcing recently the next stage of the Review of the Post Office, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade reaffirmed this commitment. In the context of the Review, we shall be examining closely further scope for sustaining and strengthening the viability of the post office network as a whole.

New Deal (Delinquency)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to monitor the impact of the New Deal on young people with a history of delinquency. [38458]

Mr. Hain: The term "delinquency" is very broad and could legitimately be defined as including a range of anti-social behaviour, some of which could not be identified formally, for example through a criminal record.

As a key part of the evaluation of the New Deal, we will seek to relate the outcomes of the New Deal participants to their individual characteristics, circumstances and labour market history, and to assess the extent to which these outcomes might have occurred in the absence of the New Deal.

As part of this work, we shall be addressing the significance of a criminal record in employment and the success of the New Deal in overcoming barriers it may create.

National Assembly

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the venue for the National Assembly in Cardiff will be announced. [38452]

Mr. Ron Davies: I will announce the venue when I have made my decision.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 399, if he will make a statement on the way in which the Welsh Health Common Services Authority accumulated its reserves; and if he will give figures on the level of these reserves at the end of each of the past five financial years. [38462]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Health Common Services Authority has accumulated its reserves in the course of its normal trading activity within the NHS.

1993–94	17,271

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the savings to his Department's expenditure on the Welsh Health Common Services Authority budget in relation to the Authority's fully repairing and insuring lease on Crickhowell House by extending the defects liability period beyond (a) 12 months, (b) 24 months, (c) 36 months and (d) 48 months. [38442]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information is not available in the form requested. The landlord has paid for all repair work during the Defects Liability Period and there has been no effect on the budget of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority who are responsible for managing the building.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what period the defects liability period on the lease of Crickhowell House has been extended. [38443]

Mr. Ron Davies: The defects liability period has not been formally extended beyond 31 March 1998. Discussions are taking place with the landlord over the scope and length of a further extension.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the consultancy study by Ove Arup Facades commissioned jointly by Welsh Health Common Services Authority and ABC into the water ingress problems in Crickhowell House. [38558]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Health Common Services Authority have not commissioned a study jointly with ABP or seen a report prepared by Ove Arup Facades.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas of the fabric of Crickhowell House which (a) have been signed off as defect-free by his Department indicating the date on which they were signed off and (b) have not been signed off as defect-free; and if he will make a statement. [38557]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information is not available in the form requested since defects are dealt with by the landlord in response to specific faults in particular locations. My Department have no responsibility for the day to day management of the building which is a matter for the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department's lease of Crickhowell House is conditional on the whole building being signed-off as defect-free. [38783]

Mr. Ron Davies: No. There are remedies contained in the lease for the rectification of defects.

Dyfed-Powys Health Authority

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the dates when the appointments of the members of the Board of the Dyfed-Powys Health Authority are due to terminate. [38658]

Ms Carys Evans: 31 March 2002

There is one vacancy.

Railway Investment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he has taken to encourage increased investment in the railway service in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [39280]

Mr. Hain: Investment in rail infrastructure is primarily a matter for Railtrack, with the Government supporting rail services through the franchise agreements with operators. One of the main objectives of the Government's new integrated transport policy will be to win more passengers and freight on to the railways. The policy will be set out in a UK White Paper to be published later in the spring, together with a complementary transport policy statement for Wales. In the meantime, I am discussing with train operators the scope for improving services from North to South Wales.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proposals for the dairy industry in Wales. [39273]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The proposals for the dairy industry are part of the Agenda 2000 reform package which has recently been published by the European Commission. The proposals have been broadly welcomed by the UK Government. The Welsh Office will continue to work closely with farming unions in Wales to identify and argue for the needs of both Welsh dairy farmers and Welsh agriculture in general as discussions move forward.

Quangos

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Black and Asian people have been appointed to Welsh quangos since 1 May 1997. [38946]

Mr. Ron Davies: I am keen to secure a wider field of candidates for public appointments who are representative of all parts of Wales. In particular, I want to encourage more candidates from those groups currently under-represented in public appointments which includes people from ethnic minorities.

Information about the ethnic origin of candidates for appointments is provided in confidence. Whilst I have appointed people from ethnic minority backgrounds to public bodies in Wales it would be a breach of that confidence to disclose the details because the numbers are such that the ethnic origin of individuals could be identified.

Endangered Species

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the action plans for endangered species and habitats prepared by Forest Enterprise would be taken forward and adapted in Wales under the separate exercise of forestry functions in England, Scotland and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [38626]

Mr. Win Griffiths: That part of Forest Enterprise's action plan for endangered species and habitats which relates to Wales is subject at present to direction by the Secretary of State for Wales. After devolution it will be subject to direction by the National Assembly for Wales.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if an order under subsection 1(1)(b) in Schedule 6 to the Government of Wales Bill could exempt Forestry Commissioners in Wales from applying the recently agreed UK Forestry standard; and if he will make a statement. [38627]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Assembly will inherit the UK Forestry Standard. Subsequently, it will be for the Assembly to decide the standards which the Commission will apply in Wales.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, following the proposed separation of functions in relation to Wales, the Forestry Commission will (a) produce a framework document and supporting corporate plan for Wales and (b) address nature conservation objectives and targets previously agreed on a Great Britain basis; and if he will make a statement. [38625]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Forestry Commission will prepare separate corporate plans for England, Scotland and Wales covering all the Commission's objectives including nature conservation.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the requirements which could be disregarded by Forestry Commissioners in Wales subject to a order under subsection 1(1)(b) in Schedule 6 to the Government of Wales Bill; and if he will make a statement. [38624]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The purpose of the powers provided by subsection 1(1)(b) of Schedule 6 of the Government of Wales Bill is to allow the Forestry Commissioners to exercise their functions in Wales separately and distinctly from England and Scotland. In exercising their functions in Wales, the Forestry Commissioners would not be obliged to have regard to the circumstances of, or requirements in, England or Scotland.

NHS Trusts

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the review of the number and share of NHS trusts in Wales to report. [38813]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I intend to consult on proposals to reduce the number of NHS trusts in Wales between June and September this year. This should enable my right hon. Friend and I to make final decisions during October 1998.

Trunk Road Programme

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the strategic review of the Welsh trunk road programme to report. [38819]

Mr. Hain: Details of the strategy for, and the role of, the Welsh trunk road programme will be included in the report on the review which will be published later this year.

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implementation of the work of the Environmental Task Force in Wales. [38731]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The New Deal for 18–24 year olds began in West Wales in January and in the rest of Wales on 6 April. The Employment Service has contracted with lead organisations to deliver the environment option of the New Deal. This option offers opportunities for young people to train and gain valuable work experience whilst meeting broad environmental objectives.

Nursery Education (Welsh Language)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister for School Standards of 24 March 1998, Official Report, columns 398–99, if he will make a statement on the accessibility of Welsh-medium nursery education in all parts of Wales. [37145]

Mr. Hain: In securing nursery education places under early years development plans, each early years development partnership must give full consideration to parental demand for Welsh-medium provision. In cases where a change in the balance of provision between the maintained and voluntary sectors is proposed, the plan must state how this will enhance and not damage the accessibility and sustainability of Welsh-medium education.

These requirements are clearly set out in the Welsh Office guidance on early years education issued this year. Plans have to be submitted to the Welsh Office by 31 May for approval.

Public Appointments

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many appointments he has made to Welsh non-departmental public bodies since 1 May 1997; how many of the appointments were (a) men and (b) women; how many existing appointees hold more than one post; and if he will list them. [38753]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have made it my general practice to advertise publicly and widely for candidates for the appointments which I make, to attract a new kind of candidate who is more representative of the whole life and community of Wales. This especially applies to the efforts to secure applications from women for these appointments, and I am determined to increase their representation on public bodies in Wales.

Recent initiatives in the media have attracted interest from a number of potential women candidates from across Wales. My Department and I are committed to building on the success of these initiatives with similar exercises in the future.

Between 1 May 1997 and 1 March 1998, I made 110 appointments, either singly or jointly. 78 were to men, and 32 to women. The number of appointments held by women has risen from 26 per cent. to 28 per cent. in the period between December 1997 and March 1998.

There are currently 54 people who hold more than one appointment. I will write separately with the details.

Information on all appointments that I make is published in "Appointments made by the Secretary of State for Wales". A copy of this publication is available in the House of Commons Library.

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if all the ESF funding received by Gwent Tertiary College for each project in the 1995 to 1997 period has been used for the purpose intended; [38900]

(2) if he will list the amount of ESF funding received by Gwent Tertiary College for each individual project for the period 1995 to 1997, together with the amount each project has already received from the college. [38899]

Mr. Hain: I am anxious that my hon. Friend receives all the information he has asked for on this matter. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as I have obtained the information from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment as detailed questions of this kind on the European Social Fund are either matters for his Department or for the College itself.

Territorial Army

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact on employment of the Territorial Army in Wales. [38457]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

As at 1 April this year, there were 3,282 members of TA units based in Wales, and these were supported by 138 Regular Army personnel, 79 Non Regular Permanent Staff and 194 other civilian staff.

No assessment has been made of the overall impact of the Territorial Army on employment in Wales.

Policy and Finance

Mr. Key: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, to whom the Church Commissioners are (a) answerable on policy matters and (b) financially accountable; and if he will make a statement. [38594]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners are answerable on policy and financial matters to Parliament and to the General Synod of the Church of England. CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries

13. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on funding for national museums. [37419]

Mr. Fisher: Funding for the national Museums and Galleries has been protected for the 1998–99 financial year. Allocations to individual institutions are unchanged from those announced by the previous Government, except for an extra £1.3 million held in reserve for the British Museum and the Tate Gallery to maintain free entry pending the outcome of the Department's spending review.

The March Budget also included the announcement of a £9 million package to promote access to Museums and Galleries.

An announcement will be made in the summer on the outcome of the Departmental Spending Review, which will inform spending decisions for 1999–2000 and beyond.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will make a statement on the criteria which he used to allocate money to (a) the British Museum, (b) the Victoria and Albert Museum, (c) the Natural History Museum and (d) the Science Museum for the year 1998–99; [38757]

(2) if he will make a statement on the criteria which he has used to allocate money for museums in 1998–99; and what plans he has to review those criteria. [38756]

Mr. Fisher: Funding for the museums and galleries sector has been protected for the 1998–99 financial year. Allocations to the national institutions are unchanged from those announced by the previous Government, except for an extra £1 million held in reserve for the British Museum (and £300 thousand for the Tate Gallery) to maintain free entry pending the outcome of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport's Spending Review.

In addition, the March Budget included the announcement of a £9 million package to further promote access to museums and galleries.

We are reviewing funding criteria for the museums and galleries sector as part of the Spending Review. The conclusions will be announced in the summer and will inform spending decisions for 1999–2000 and beyond.

24. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to promote more educational programmes by museums and galleries. [37431]

Mr. Fisher: This is an issue for my Department's spending review, which will be completed in the summer. Museums and galleries have great educational value and I am keen to encourage development of that role.

Football

14. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about the structure of the Football Association Premiership and the Footb 'l League. [37420]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My colleagues the Secretary of State and the Minister for Sport have received a number of representations. The governing bodies of professional football have a key role in the future of the game. They will note the wide support shown for the Ten Minute Rule Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 7 April.

Media Ownership

15. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to alter the rules governing media ownership. [37421]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have no plans to alter the rules covering media ownership. The rules introduced by the Broadcasting Act 1996 have been in force for only 17 months.

National Lottery

16. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his plans for his Department's role in the disbursement of national lottery money. [37422]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department will continue to set a framework for the distribution of Lottery money through legislation and through directions issued under that legislation. Distributors will be responsible for decisions on individual applications.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to reduce the proportion of lottery money that will go to the arts, sport, heritage and charities. [37433]

Mr. Chris Smith: The proportion of lottery income which the arts, sport, heritage and charities each receive will be amended to 16.% from 14 October 1997, subject to the passage of the necessary provision in the National Lottery Bill. Each can still expect to receive £1.8 billion over the period of the current licence. This matches their original expectation when the Lottery was launched.

NESTA Scheme

17. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from scientists in Norwich on initiatives under the NESTA scheme. [37423]

Mr. Fisher: I have received a number of representations from organisations in the Norwich area but I am not aware of any representations specifically from scientists in Norwich.

Royal Parks (Cycle Routes)

18. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has had on the provision of cycle routes in the royal parks. [37425]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a letter from my hon. Friend, in his capacity as Secretary of the All Party Cycling Group, seeking a meeting to discuss the level of provision for cyclists in the Royal Parks.

Film Industry

19. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans the Government have to respond to the development needs of the film industry. [37426]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Ms Russell) about the Film Policy Review Report, 'A Bigger Picture', which proposes new forms of public and private sector support for the vital script development process.

23. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what response he is making to the Clarke/Till review of the British film industry. [37430]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I welcome the Report. It represents a great opportunity for Government and industry to work together to create the conditions necessary for the long-term prosperity of the British film industry.

Tourism

21. Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what account he plans to take of sustainable development needs in the new tourism strategy. [37428]

Mr. Tom Clarke: We are committed to enabling tourism growth which is economically, socially and environmentally sustainable and our new tourism strategy will reflect that commitment.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he intends to take to encourage people from overseas to visit the United Kingdom. [37417]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department continues to support the British Tourist Authority's excellent work to promote Britain overseas as a visitor destination. As part of our work on the new strategy for tourism to be published later this year, we are looking at how further to encourage the sustainable development of both incoming and domestic tourism.

Sports Institute

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future role of the United Kingdom sports institute. [37427]

Mr. Fisher: The United Kingdom Sports Institute's mission is to put the UK at the top of world sport by providing quality services that our elite athletes, including those with disabilities, will want to use. The Sheffield Headquarters site will co-ordinate and direct a network of centres of sporting excellence which will be accessible across Britain.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

33. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is his definition of British for the purpose of the contents of the Millennium Experience. [37441]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 217.

34. Mr. Cranston: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on his plans for the educational components of the Millennium Experience. [37442]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is charged with creating a Millennium Experience which is educational, inspirational, and fun. Most aspects of the Experience (both the Dome at Greenwich and the associated national programme of events and activities) will have an educational element and will support the principle of lifelong learning. Some parts of the Experience have a particular education focus—The Learning Curve and Licensed to Skill zones within the Dome will reflect the close inter-relationship of learning with the changing world of work. The national programme will provide opportunities for people to participate with educational organisations on community based local and regional learning projects. The NMEC have Education Managers in each of its twelve local offices around the country. These Managers will support and promote national programme activities and events in liaison with community groups, local authorities and local education authorities and establishments.

35. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to appoint a new creative director for the Millennium Experience project. [37443]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) on 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 11.

SCOTLAND

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of his expenditure plans for each year from 1994–95 to 1999–2000 in cash and real terms at 1997–98 prices, indicating changes announced since the publication of Serving Scotland's Needs, setting out the cumulative spending planned for 1998–99 to 1999–2000 under each item in real terms and the total cumulative spending assuming that spending is maintained at 1997–98 real term levels; and if he will indicate the difference between the two cumulative totals. [36098]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The information for each year from 1994–95 to 1998–99 is set out in the tables which are based on information published in my Departmental Report "Serving Scotland's Needs" (Cm3914) on 9 April 1998. No plans for 1999–2000 are given as these are subject to the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. As a result, the cumulative spending totals and comparison requested cannot be shown.

[3] From 1998–99 departments will take on responsibility from Property Repayment Services (PRS) for buildings which the government owns and occupies. The change from paying rents to paying capital charges has resulted in a reduction in planned expenditure for 1998–99 of around £10 million on both the Law, Order and Protective Services and the other public service programmes, relating to the Scottish Courts estate and The Scottish Office estate respectively.

Scottish National Gallery

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total sum of public money involved in the preparation and presentation of the application for millennium funding towards the proposed Scottish National Gallery project; and if he will make a statement. [37128]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 31 March 1998]: I understand that the total estimated costs incurred by the National Galleries of Scotland (NGS) over the 7 year period since 1991 to date in developing their proposals to establish a new National Gallery in Glasgow were £650,000. This includes expenditure on the preparation and presentation of the two applications which they submitted to the Heritage Lottery Fund, the first in respect of the former Post Office building in George Square and the second in respect of the former Sheriff Court building in Ingram Street.

The Glasgow Development Agency has also incurred expenditure estimated at some £400,000 on the proposed project over the past 5 years, particularly on site investigations, technical consultancies and an architectural competition. I understand that much of this expenditure would have been necessary whatever uses had been contemplated for these buildings and that little of it was directly related to the applications for Lottery funding made by the NGS.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what NHS provision is available in the Edinburgh area to support sufferers from ME; and what plans he has to increase that provision. [38309]

Mr. Galbraith: Lothian health board has indicated that there is a range of services available for patients who have been diagnosed as suffering from ME. General Medical Practitioners usually refer patients to the Infectious Disease Department of the City Hospital. Following diagnosis, patients are offered appropriate treatment for specific symptoms, advice, counselling, psychological support and, if necessary, referral to a psychiatrist with particular expertise in ME. Lothian health board has indicated that it has no plans at present to change the range of services provided.

Fire Service

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the capital allocations to the Fire Service in the current year, with particular reference to Lothian and Borders. [37926]

Mr. McLeish: No. The fire service capital programme for 1998–99 remains, at its highest ever level, £15.6 million. From this total, Lothian and Borders Joint Fire Board has been granted a special allocation of £0.6 million both in 1997–98 and 1998–99 to assist with its major project of headquarters refurbishment. In addition the board has in each year received its full formula share of the total programme, net of top-slicing for major projects.

Higher Still

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent to date on the development and promotion of Higher Still; how much it is planned to spend in 1998–99 and 1999–2000; on what the money has been spent or will be spent; how many FTE staff have been employed on it in each year; and what estimate he has made of the total amount of staff time devoted to Higher Still in each year. [37927]

Mr. Wilson: As at 31 March 1998, some £15.3m had been directly spent on Higher Still. Planned expenditure in 1998–99 is £5.2m. A budget for 1999–2000 will be set in due course in the light of the Comprehensive Spending Review. In addition, further expenditure has been and will be incurred by local authorities, the Scottish Qualifications Authority and the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum.

This funding has covered all aspects of the development of Higher Still, including staffing and running costs associated with the Higher Still Development Unit (HSDU). Major areas of expenditure have included consultation on and the development of the new units and courses, the printing and distribution of final arrangements documents and subject guides, the provision of staff development seminars for subject leaders, work on core skills and Scottish Group Awards, and the ongoing development of a wide range of support materials, including learning and teaching materials and the National Assessment Bank.

The numbers of full time equivalent staff employed on Higher Still, by both the Higher Still Development Unit (HSDU) and The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department (SOEID) are as noted.

Year	Number of FTE staff working for or with HSDU[1]	Number of FTE staff employed by SOEID on Higher Still
1994–95	37.5	5.6
1995–96	39.0	6.8
1996–97	64.0	7.6
1997–98	94.5	6.7

[1] This includes HSDU staff, National Trainers, Development Officers and some staff of the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state for each local enterprise company in Scotland the (a) names, (b) dates of appointment and (c) party affiliations of the non-executive directors who have (i) been appointed since 1 May 1997 and (ii) resigned since 1 May 1997. [37795]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 6 April 1998]: Local Enterprise Companies are private companies that contract with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. No information is held on the party affiliations of non-executive directors of local enterprise companies. The other information requested is set out in the table.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs of (a) anti-drugs education initiatives and (b) other drugs reduction initiatives in each of the past 14 years; and what are the expected costs of similar campaigns in each of the next five years. [38358]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 8 April 1998]: Information on expenditure on anti-drugs education and other drug reduction initiatives since 1983 is not held centrally. The expected costs of similar campaigns to 2003 will depend upon plans for tackling drug misuse in future years.

Overgrazing

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy on the grazing of moorlands by domestic livestock. [38566]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government's policy is to limit damage to moorlands from any overgrazing by livestock which attract headage payments. Our agri-environment schemes provide for enhancement of the moorland environment by a range of measures including stock removal where appropriate.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of potential overgrazing of heath and heather vegetation in the LFA were investigated by the Agriculture Department in each of the last three years; and how many of these investigations resulted in the withholding of (a) some and (b) all of the livestock headage payments made to the farmers involved. [38560]

Mr. Macdonald: Twelve cases of alleged overgrazing have been investigated in the last three years. Most of these have been resolved by agreement with the producer. There have been no instances so far where it has been necessary to restrict livestock headage payments.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the environmental conditions attached to the receipt of livestock headage payments made through (a) hill livestock compensatory allowances, (b) sheep annual premiums, (c) suckler cow premiums and (d) beef special premiums to prevent overgrazing. [38561]

Mr. Macdonald: Subsidy payments under these schemes are conditional on the stock being managed so as to prevent damage through overgrazing and semi-natural vegetation.

Hedgerows

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to protect hedgerows. [38569]

Mr. Macdonald: The importance of hedgerows is widely recognised not only in natural heritage terms, but also for farming, cultural and archaeological reasons. Incentives are available to encourage farmers and crofters to maintain their existing hedges and to plant new hedges through both the Government's agri-environment programme and Scottish Natural Heritage grants

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children have been excluded from school in each academic year since 1990–91. [39176]

Mr. Wilson: Information on exclusions from school was not collected centrally before 1994–95. The most recent available information, as set out in the yearly report on Attendance and Absence in Scottish Schools published by the Audit Unit of HM Inspectors of Schools, is in the table.

	Number of pupils permanently excluded[1]		Number of half days of temporary exclusions
	Primary	Secondary	Primary	Secondary
1994–95	47	296	[2]20,115	[2]157,958
1995–96	30	155	31,207	279,636
1996–97	16	91	36,433	276,979

[1] Some authorities show a total of zero for permanent exclusions, either because as a matter of policy they do not permit permanent exclusions or because they do not record permanent exclusions separately.

[2] For 1994–95, data on temporary exclusions are available only for January–July 1995.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list Scottish Development Agency-funded environmental improvement projects in each Scottish constituency. [39175]

Mr. Wilson: Detailed information on the programme of environmental improvements funded by the Scottish Development Agency is no longer available. The Agency's successor, the Scottish Enterprise network, has funded up to 400 separate environmental improvements each year since 1991. Information on the Scottish Enterprise environmental improvement programme in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

School Sport

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to improve facilities for sport in schools. [39173]

Mr. Galbraith: The provision of facilities for sport in schools is a matter for local authorities. The Government have, however, recently announced tighter planning controls on the use of playing fields for development to ensure that wherever possible sports facilities are retained for use by the local school and community. In addition the Scottish Sports Council has allocated over £3.5 million through the National Lottery to sports projects in schools.

Physical Education Teachers

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many physical education teachers were employed by local education authorities in each year since 1979. [39174]

Mr. Wilson: The available information for years in which the data were collected is set out in the table:

Number (full-time equivalent) of physical education teachers in Scottish education authority secondary schools

Year (at September)	Number
1979	2,008
1980	1,998
1981	1,934
1982	1,896
1983	[1]1,862
1984	[1]1,792
1987	1,698
1988	1,614
1990	1,618
1992	1,618
1994	1,672

[1] estimated

No information has been collected since 1994 as the situation was thought to have remained fairly stable and it was not considered desirable to burden teachers with a data collection. The next return from teachers will be in September 1998.

DEFENCE

Northern Ireland

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) number and (b) names of individual members of the armed forces killed while serving in Northern Ireland since 1982. [38405]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is set out in the table.

Anthrax

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantity of (a) anthrax and (b) precursors for the production of anthrax is stored (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) at United Kingdom bases abroad; and at how many locations in total UK-owned anthrax is stored. [38073]

Dr. Reid: The United Kingdom has no offensive chemical or biological warfare capability. The United Kingdom is a State Party to the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention, and holds no bulk stocks of agents such as Bacillus anthracis (B. anthracis) which causes the disease anthrax either in the United Kingdom or abroad.

The Ministry of Defence does fund research with anthrax bacteria as part of its programme to provide effective protection to United Kingdom service personnel should chemical or biological agents be used against them. Such research is conducted on behalf of the Ministry of Defence at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Porton Down or is sub-contracted by them to the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, which is part of the Department of Health. Both organisations hold only seed stocks of B. anthracis. These are grown in culture when required. Excess material is routinely killed after experiments are completed. B. anthracis can be cultured under a wide variety of conditions and using media typically held in public or private sector microbiology laboratories. CBD Sector does not routinely use specialist media or precursors.

Small outbreaks of animal anthrax occur annually in the UK and, very rarely, human cases also occur. There is, therefore, a need to maintain a diagnostic service and to conduct periodic testing to ensure the efficacy of the vaccine. In this context, a small number of centres in the health service hold strains of B. anthracis for public health purposes.

All laboratories working with B. anthracis have to meet strict health and safety requirements and must be licensed under the Specified Animal Pathogens Order 1998 which lays down strict containment conditions. Nine premises are currently licensed.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the (i) effect on mortality and (ii) incidence of cancer of exposure to nuclear tests according to the degree and extent of exposure to radiation. [38581]

Mr. Spellar: As I told the House on 4 February 1998, Official Report, column 1010, nuclear test veterans have been the subject of two detailed studies by the National Radiological Protection Board, the first in 1988 and the second in 1993. The 1993 report concluded that participation in the test programme had not had a detectable effect on the participants' expectation of life or on their risk of developing cancer or other fatal diseases.

Salisbury Plain

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints he has received about the conduct of the Ministry of Defence police concerning their enforcement of the Salisbury Plain byelaws on Saturday 4 April. [38649]

Dr. Reid: None, although I understand the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police has received correspondence about the Royal Artillery Hunt.

Mustard Gas

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to investigate the extent of pollution from mustard gas disposal at Spalford Woods, Nottinghamshire. [39150]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Army Standards

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the Adjutant General's revised paper on army standards and discipline; and if he will make a statement. [38570]

Dr. Reid: The Army is currently undertaking work on its standards and discipline policy with the aim of revising and bringing up to date its current Standards and Discipline paper, issued in October 1993. When the work is completed, I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many surveys have been conducted into the contamination of, and pollution from, the former chemical warfare filling and storage site at Barnham Heath in Suffolk since 1980; [38599]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 13 March 1998, Official Report, column 428, if he will list the titles of each survey at RAF Norton Disney and Riseley, indicating the dates on which each survey was completed, the agency which conducted each survey; and the current security classifications of each survey. [38598]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Records

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will open for public inspection file classmark WO32/20163 held at the Public Record Office. [38607]

Mr. Spellar: WO32/20163 is open. It was transferred to the Public Record Office on 11 July 1997.

WE177 Bombs

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many WE177 bombs have so far been dismantled. [38961]

Dr. Reid: 86 per cent. of our WE177 warheads have now been dismantled.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what types of vehicle were used to transport the WE177 bomb. [38960]

Dr. Reid: The following types of vehicle have been used to transport the WE177 which was withdrawn from service on 31 March 1998.

Truck Cargo 4t 4x4 Bedford MK

Truck Cargo Heavy Duty Mk I

Truck Cargo Heavy Duty Mk II

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when training for RAF pilots with the WE177 bomb was ended. [38959]

Dr. Reid: The last formal course for RAF aircrew took place in April 1997. This was supplemented by simulator continuation training in procedures on unit to maintain aircrew currency through to March 1998. The WE177 bomb was withdrawn from service on 31 March 1998.

Admiralty and Army Boards

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the (a) Admiralty Board and (b) Army Board has met since 1 August 1997. [38993]

Dr. Reid: Neither the Admiralty Board nor the Army Board have met since 1 August 1997.

The Admiralty Board last met on 2 July 1997 and will next meet on 1 July 1998.

The Army Board last met on 18 June 1997 and will next meet on 24 July 1998.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 November 1997, Official Report, column 562, if HMS Dreadnought's radiation dose levels were recorded prior to or after the defuelling process. [38847]

Mr. Spellar: The radiation dose figure given in my answer of 26 November referred to the aggregate radiation dose received by all persons who worked on HMS Dreadnought from 1982 to 1983. This was obtained from measurements of individual doses made throughout the duration of the decommissioning project, which included the defuelling process.

Radiation dose rates on board HMS Dreadnought were measured both before and after the defuelling process. As expected, there was little reduction in the general radiation level following the defuel as the reactor fuel is always heavily shielded.

Staff Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of (a) the Army Technical Support Agency, (b) the Defence Transport and Movements Executive and (c) the Defence Medical Training Organisation; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [38986]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. D. Ball to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 20 April 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the staff newsletter of the Army Technical Support Agency (ATSA) as this matter falls within my responsibility as the Agency Chief Executive.

The ATSA Newsletter carries no security classification. It contains "Unclassified" material. The Newsletter is published quarterly. The first edition was issued coincidentally with the launch of the Agency in Autumn 1995, although earlier newsheets on the progress towards Agency formation were issued to affected staff prior to launch.

Letter from C. G. Callow to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 20 April 1998:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Defence Medical Training Organisation newsletter as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of that Agency.

Our newsletter is unclassified and we produce it as and when we consider necessary which has been twice a year. The first newsletter was produced in July 1996.

Letter from R. E. Ratazzi to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 20 April 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about the security classification and frequency of newsletters produced for the staff of Ministry of Defence Agencies, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive Agency.

The newsletter produced within my Agency is unclassified, intended purely for internal circulation and, dependent on material for inclusion, is issued on a monthly basis. It was originally entitled "DTMX Developments" and ran from July 1995 until November 1996, when it was renamed "DTMX press". It has continued to be distributed to all staff since then.

Aircraft Crashes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the Royal Air Force Board of Inquiry found was the cause of each of the aircraft crashes (a) 13 April 1989—Jaguar, (b) 13 November 1990—Jaguar, (c) 18 March 1991—Canberra, (d) 27 May 1993—Hercules, (e) 26 August 1993—Chipmunk, (f) 1 September 1994—Tornado and (g) 1 June 1995—Harrier, if black boxes were fitted; and in each case if higher authority concluded that negligence had occurred. [38984]

Mr. Spellar: Details of the accidents mentioned are contained in the appropriate Military Aircraft Accident Summaries, copies of which are kept in the Library of the House. A brief summary of the cases is as follows:

Accident	Cause	Accident Data Recorder (Y/N)	Negligence (Y/N)
13 April 1989—Jaguar	Not positively determined	N	N
13 November 1990—Jaguar	Natural operating risks	N	N
18 March 1991—Canberra	Aircrew error	N	N
27 May 1993—Hercules	Not positively determined	N	N
26 August 1993—Chipmunk	Human factors (aircrew)	N	N
1 September 1994—Tornado	Not positively determined	Y	N
1 June 1995—Harrier	Human factors (aircrew)	Y	N

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Health

Mr. Cranston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to place research on animal health and welfare on the basis of a requirements document, similar to that for food research; and if he will make a statement. [39195]

Mr. Rooker: We are today publishing a Document setting out our future animal health and welfare research requirements, and inviting tenders for research work to be financed in the year starting on 1 April 1999, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. This document focuses particularly on animal welfare, organisms capable of causing food poisoning, and bovine tuberculosis. Further documents setting out animal health and welfare research requirements will be published in future years.

This is a broad programme. One of the key elements builds on our current work to improve our understanding of how E. coli behaves on farms, and to identify the critical control points for risk management. This will complement work being financed by other Departments.

The Document also takes forward the recommendations in the Krebs Report that our research effort into bovine tuberculosis should be refocused along two main approaches: understanding the causes of outbreaks, and developing improved strategies to reduce the number of outbreaks. The Ministry's research programmes generally operate on a rolling three-year cycle, so for most of the programmes the Document covers only approximately one third of the total research effort. For bovine tuberculosis, however, the whole programme has been reviewed in the light of the recommendations in the Krebs Report. The new TB programme picks up the individual recommendations the Report makes for research and lays the foundation for developing soundly based control strategies in the future, including in the longer term the development of a cattle vaccine.

The Document also makes a significant movement in the direction of allocating research contracts by open competition, which will help to ensure that work is undertaken by those best qualified to do it. This also responds to another of the Krebs recommendations, and must be right if we are to achieve value for money in this area.

Ministerial Meetings and Visits

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list for 2 May 1997 (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [35004]

(2) if he will list for 3 May 1997 (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [35007]

Cattle Tracing

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the cattle tracing system is expected to start operating. [38967]

Dr. John Cunningham: The launch date for the Cattle Tracing System (CTS) will be 28 September 1998. The system will register cattle and their movements from birth to death. It is an enhancement to the current cattle passport database which already holds details of over five million cattle born or imported into Great Britain from 1 July 1996. The main change will be to hold in addition the movement history of all those cattle registered on to the system from 28 September.

A new organisation, the British Cattle Movement Service (BCMS), is being set up in Workington, Cumbria to run the CTS. Recruitment is going well, with applications of high quality; buildings have been handed over on time; the main equipment has been installed; and development of the new system is in hand.

The Government are today sending to all cattle farmers, livestock markets and operators of abattoirs in Great Britain a leaflet about CTS. The leaflet gives details of the new cattle passport which will be introduced as part of the CTS. The new passport will include details of the animal, details of where it has been throughout its life, cards for owners of cattle to send in when the animal moves, a record of Beef Special Premium and eventually, details of the death of the animal. Cattle with the new passport will not require a separate Cattle Identification Document for Beef Special Premium, thus reducing one element of paperwork for farmers.

The leaflet we are sending out today is the first in a series which will be sent to cattle farmers between now and the launch of CTS on 28 September, to familiarise everyone with their role in the new system.

As I have previously announced, the Government have decided that they will meet the costs not only of setting up the CTS, but also of running and enforcing it during its first full year of operation. This is a step of real value to the livestock industry, with Government bearing costs of the order of £35 million on behalf of the industry.

The CTS offers great opportunities to the British Cattle industry. The new system will make it possible to check easily where cattle have been during their lives, trace cattle more easily if there is a disease outbreak, and give greater assurance to buyers about an animal's history, and so help to rebuild confidence in British cattle and British beef, at home and abroad.

Animal Waste

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of the United Kingdom legislation controlling the disposal of animal waste to be completed. [38790]

Mr. Rooker: The review is almost complete and revised legislation is being drafted as a basis for consultation.

Public Analyst Service

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of the Public Analyst Service in England and Wales to be completed. [38804]

Mr. Rooker: I expect to announce the arrangements and terms of reference for the review very shortly. I hope the review will be completed before the end of the year.

Milk Development Council

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of the Milk Development Council to be completed. [38814]

Mr. Rooker: The review of the Milk Development Council was completed in October 1997 and its remit was extended for a further five years with effect from 7 February 1998.

Quarantine

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of the current rules on quarantine of imported pet animals to be completed. [38810]

Mr. Rooker: I now expect to receive the report of the Advisory Group on quarantine in June. It will then be published and a full public consultation held.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the projected expenditure of the Meat Hygiene Service from 1 April. [38076]

Mr. Rooker: The latest estimate of the total gross expenditure of the Meat Hygiene Service for 1998/99 is £62 million.

The Meat Hygiene Service is required to recover the full costs of providing its inspection service. Approximately half of these costs are recovered from the industry for meat hygiene and inspection controls and the remainder from government, predominantly for specified risk material controls.

Forecasts of Meat Hygiene Service expenditure for future years are not available.

Live Animal Exports

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) live sheep and (b) live pigs were exported from the United Kingdom in 1997 for (i) slaughter, (ii) further fattening and (iii) breeding; and how many live (1) sheep and (2) pigs in each of these categories were exported to each individual country of destination. [37196]

Mr. Rooker: The table, derived from Departmental records, gives details of sheep and pigs certified for export from the United Kingdom. The figures do not include information on the number of sheep exported from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland as sheep are not officially certified for such trade under a special arrangement provided for in EC trade rules.

This information is provisional and subject to change.

It is common practice for export health certificates to be issued in anticipation of exports which do not then take place. The central computer system is updated periodically to remove details of withdrawn export consignments from the records but we cannot guarantee that this information is complete. Confirmation of the actual numbers of animals exported could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fisheries

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1997, Official Report, column 135, if he is now able to state the membership of the review team and the terms of reference of the Review of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Legislation. [37348]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 234–35.

Meat Imports

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at which ports since 1 May 1997 checks have been carried out into the quality of imported consignments of meat; what proportion of those checks have involved inspections of (i) the meat, (ii) the documentation and (iii) both; what assessment he has made of the value of checks involving (a) meat and (b) documentation; and if he will make a statement. [38580]

Mr. Rooker: The following table records the number of checks carried out at Border Inspection Posts in the UK on consignments of meat and meat products imported from countries outside the EU. So far as meat from other Member States is concerned, single market rules provide only for random, non-discriminatory checks at destination, not at ports of entry.

Milk Prices

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the reasons for the discrepancy between the recent movement of prices of milk (a) at the farm gate and (b) at supermarkets. [38470]

Mr. Rooker: Retail prices are affected by several factors apart from agricultural raw material costs, such as processing, marketing and distribution costs, and the marketing strategies of individual competing retailers. The recent, apparent increase in the difference between the farm-gate and retail milk prices follows a period during which that difference fell.

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when and for what purposes the organophosphate pesticide Fonofos, manufactured by Zeneca, was licensed; what warnings were given to users to prevent harmful effects to wildlife; and if he will make a statement on the information made available about the product. [38428]

Mr. Rooker: Fonofos was first cleared for use in the UK in 1970; its main uses are as a treatment for cereal seed and as a spray for brassicas and ornamental crops. Warnings about effects on wildlife are carried on the product labels.

The Wildlife Incidents Investigation Scheme received reports of incidents involving birds and the risk to birds was reviewed by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides in 1994. The Committee advised that approval could continue with a user education programme being carried out by Zeneca and a five year assessment of the programme and its impact on reported incidents.

The user education programme, including a leaflet and warning stickers for drilling equipment and seed bags/pallets, was implemented by Zeneca and only one incident has been reported in the first three years.

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has conducted into the effect of (i) phosmet and (ii) other organophosphates on prion protein metabolism; and what plans he has to conduct further research. [38602]

Mr. Rooker: None. We would, however, be prepared to consider research applications from scientists who wish to work in this area as part of our ongoing commitment to support research, including independent research, into BSE. Any application would be considered on its own merits in competition with other applications for financial support.

Bananas

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist developing countries with exports of fairly-traded bananas. [39005]

Mr. Rooker: This Government are sympathetic to the idea of encouraging "Fair Trade" in exports of some products from developing countries. On bananas, we have, as Presidency, initiated discussions in the context of the current negotiations on the EU regime on what might be done to promote the marketing of Fair Trade bananas. We await a communication on this from the Commission. It will of course need to respect our obligations under the World Trade Organisation.

Tups

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the price of tups. [39202]

Mr. Rooker: Although we have had representations from all the main organisations representing sheep farmers' interests about the poor returns experienced on the sale of lambs, no one has raised concerns about the price of tups.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 728, if the legal fees specified include the costs of litigation by the contractor over alleged changes of specification at short notice; and if he will list the costs and legal fees incurred. [38150]

Mr. Rooker: The legal fees mentioned in my answer of 5 March relate to fees generally incurred in major projects of this sort. There is no litigation by the contractor. Legal fees to date are in the order of £40,000.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Physical Education

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimates he has made of the average number of hours per week spent on physical education in primary schools in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97. [31001]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department carried out a survey of PE and sport in English schools in January 1996. It found that primary school pupils had on average 1.5 to 2 hours per week of National Curriculum PE. No information is held on 1979–80 or 1996–97.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the quality of physical education in primary schools. [31002]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are committed to improving the quality of education in all subjects in all schools.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect on physical education teaching of his proposed changes to the National Curriculum. [31004]

Ms Estelle Morris: None. Physical Education is to remain a National Curriculum subject and will continue to be taught in all schools.

Supported Employment Programme

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many places were allocated to each district and region under the supported employment programme in 1997–98; and what is the estimated number of places for 1998–99; [37298]

(2) what increase has been budgeted in the revenue grant for each disabled employee in sheltered workshops for 1998–99; and what allowance has been made for inflation. [37299]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 20 April 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply direct to your questions about what increase has been budgeted in the revenue grant for each disabled employee in supported workshops for 1998–99; what allowance has been made for inflation; how many places were allocated to each district and region under the supported employment programme in 1997–98; and what is the number of estimated places for 1998–99. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

As the budget for the Supported Employment Programme remains the same for 1998–99 as for 1997–98, the maximum grant level made available for the supported workshop and supported placements provision will remain at £4,680 per contracted place.

Turning to your question about how many places were allocated in 1997–98 and the estimated numbers for 1998–99, supported employment is delivered through Local Authorities and Voluntary Organisations and by Remploy Ltd. At the beginning of each year the Employment Service negotiates and reaches agreement with supported employment providers to deliver an agreed minimum number of places against the maximum grant level. Negotiations with Remploy are based on targets agreed within an Annual Performance Agreement.

The agreed national target for 1997–98 and 1998–99 for places in supported employment provided by Local Authorities and Voluntary Organisations is 12,250. In addition, Remploy Ltd. have a target minimum number of places of 9,800 for 1997–98 and 10,050 for 1998–99. In order to achieve the target of 12,250 for non-Remploy places we contract for slightly higher numbers, which allows for variations in filled places and enables us to make maximum use of the funds available to the Programme. In 1997–98, 12,426.5 places were allocated to Local Authorities and Voluntary Organisations. For 1998–99 we have allocated 12,436.

Because the Supported Employment Programme is managed at national rather than regional level, I regret that it is not possible to provide figures at regional and district level.

I hope this is helpful.

Special Schools

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages of including special schools for children with profound learning disabilities in performance league tables. [37462]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are committed to making school performance tables as clear and helpful as possible. They should reflect the achievements of all pupils, including the achievements of those with profound learning disabilities. Secondary school tables list special schools in a separate section, and we are currently consulting on measures to ensure that the secondary tables as a whole give a more complete picture of achievement across the board.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the relevance of the National Curriculum and OFSTED inspections to schools for children with profound learning disabilities. [37461]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have high expectations for all children including those with special educational needs. Ofsted inspections indentify schools' strengths and weaknesses so that they may improve the quality of the education they provide and raise the standards achieved by their pupils. Teams inspecting special schools must include expertise in the main types of special educational need represented in the school as well as the ability to ensure reasonable sampling of the subjects across the age range of pupils at the school.

All children are entitled to participate in the National Curriculum and we are committed to ensuring that it is accessible and relevant to pupils with special educational needs. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority has issued guidance on a variety of approaches to present the National Curriculum to pupils with profound and multiple difficulties. Many special schools have already successfully challenged low expectations and differentiated the curriculum to meet a wide range of needs.

E-mail (Schools)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he estimates every school student will have their own e-mail address. [37943]

Dr. Howells: The target set out in the Government's consultation paper, "Connecting the Learning Society", is that by 2002 all schools, colleges, universities and libraries and as many community centres as possible should be connected to the National Grid for Learning, enabling 75 per cent. of teachers and lecturers and 50 per cent. of pupils and students to use their own e-mail addresses.

GCSE Examinations

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils in each local education authority sat GCSE examinations in 1997; and of those how many sat (a) nine or more, (b) five to eight and (c) fewer than five GCSE examinations. [38294]

Dr. Howells: The information requested in respect of GCSEs is shown in the table.

School Exclusions and Expulsions (Easington)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by school in the Easington constituency the number of pupils by age who have been (a) excluded and (b) expelled in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997. [37858]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on excluded pupils in individual schools is not published centrally.

School Exclusions (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many permanent exclusions there were from schools in Leicestershire in the last year for which figures are available. [37918]

Ms Estelle Morris: In 1995/96, the last year for which figures are available, there were 240 permanent exclusions from schools in Leicestershire.

School Psychologists

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the ratio of school psychologists to school pupils for each local education authority area. [37958]

Value-added Measures

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures are being taken to promote use of the concept of value added among local education authorities and in schools and colleges; and if he will make a statement. [38371]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) has just published a compendium, including illustrative value added information, for use by local education authorities (LEAs) to support their role in helping schools to interpret performance data and set challenging targets. National value-added information, using results form the 1998 National Curriculum assessments and public examinations, will be sent directly to schools in the Autumn as part of a package of performance information.

Export Training

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the role of training and enterprise councils in facilitating training relating to exports. [38122]

Dr. Howells: We expect TECs to tailor their services to the needs of their local areas. With and through their Business Link Partnerships, they provide a wide range of help to exporters, including providing training where appropriate.

Skill Shortages (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the areas of skill shortages in the Seaham and Peterlee areas. [37912]

Dr. Howells: The Department has made no assessment of the areas of skill shortages in the Seaham and Peterlee areas.

However, the Education and Training sub-group of the East Durham Task Force, jointly chaired by the Chief Executive of the County Durham TEC and the Principal of Peterlee College, is still looking into skill shortages in the Easington, Peterlee and Seaham areas. Engineering skills have been identified as a difficulty, and County Durham TEC has provided £100,000 to enhance facilities at the Engineering Centre at Peterlee.

New Deal

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the New Deal units of delivery, (b) the partnerships and (c) the organisation taking the lead in each unit throughout the UK; and if he will make a statement. [38098]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 7 April 1998]: I have placed in the Library a list of the 143 New Deal units of delivery in England, Scotland and Wales which includes details of the organisation taking the lead in each unit.

Each unit has a strategic partnership involving a variety of key players from the local area such as the local authority, the TEC and representatives of employers and the voluntary sector. The composition of each has been different depending upon the particular local needs of the area. These partnerships have worked with the Employment Service to develop the delivery plans for each unit. Each unit will also have a range of delivery partners for each of the elements of New Deal and again the numbers of partners involved will vary depending upon the needs of young people and size of the client group joining New Deal.

We do not have the information centrally to complete a list of all those involved in every partnership across the country.

School Closures (Staffordshire)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools which have closed in Staffordshire since 1983. [36958]

Mr. Byers: Shown in the table which I have placed in the Library, are all the maintained schools which, according to the Department's information, have been closed in Staffordshire since 1983. A number of the listed schools have closed as a result of amalgamations with other schools while others have closed to facilitate a change in age range. In such cases the replacement schools are also listed.

Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will exempt students on four year B.Ed (Hons) courses from paying fees for the fourth year. [39166]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have already announced that trainee teachers on postgraduate certificate of education (PGCE) courses will not have to make means-tested contributions towards tuition fees. We see PGCE courses as a priority, as this is the route followed by most trainee secondary teachers, and under-recruitment has only affected secondary training courses to date. We have no plans to make similar provision for BEd courses, but continue to monitor recruitment to all courses.

Music (Schools)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for the provision of music in schools. [37415]

Ms Estelle Morris: Music will remain a National Curriculum foundation subject and will continue to be taught in all schools. In addition, the Government are currently considering ways in which it might be possible to increase opportunities for children to have equitable access to high quality musical instrument tuition.

Special Needs

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if it is the Government's long-term policy that individual children with special educational needs should have a continuing legal entitlement to receive the special educational provision that their needs require. [38429]

Ms Estelle Morris: Yes.

Job Club (Sutton)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the start-up costs of opening the Sutton Job Club, Lewis Road, Sutton, in October 1997; when, and by whom, the decision was taken to close the Sutton Job Club; and what costs have been incurred in closing the club. [39050]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 20 April 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your question about the start-up costs of opening the Sutton Jobclub, Lewis Road,

Sutton, in October 1997; when, and by whom, the decision was taken to close the Sutton Jobclub; and what costs have been incurred in closing club. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

There were no costs incurred by the Employment Service in setting up Sutton Jobclub. The decision to close the Jobclub was taken by Colin Purtill, the Employment Service District Manager responsible for services in Sutton, after consultation in the locality in January and February 1998.

There will be no additional costs incurred in closing the Jobclub. The Employment Service pays fees to its contracted providers monthly in arrears. The Jobclub contract allows for an early termination without penalty provided at least six weeks notice is given. In this instance the provider who runs our Sutton Jobclub, Instant Muscle, was given eight weeks notice to close on 1 May 1998.

I hope this is helpful.

HEALTH

Breast Cancer

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set a target for reduction in breast cancer mortality in women aged over 65 years. [38152]

Mr. Boateng: Cancer is one of the four priority areas identified in the Green Paper, Our Healthier Nation, which was published for consultation on 5 February 1998. At present, the strategy proposes a national target to reduce the death rate from cancer amongst people aged under 65 years by at least a fifth by 2010. This will also benefit those aged over 65 years. A decision on whether this national target should be modified will be made in the light of consultation responses. The Green Paper also emphasises the need for local targets to identify particular areas of local concern.

We are committed to reducing breast cancer mortality for all women. The new National Health Service White Paper gives a guarantee that everyone with suspected breast cancer will be able to see a specialist within two weeks of general practitioner referral.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of all tests for cervical cancers were false positives in the last year for which information is available; and how many unnecessary remedial procedures have been carried out in each of the past 10 years. [38739]

Mr. Boateng: Cervical screening is not a test for cervical cancer itself. Cervical screening can prevent cancer of the cervix by finding abnormal cells before they become cancerous, enabling treatment to be given to prevent cancer developing. Not all abnormal cells will become cancerous, but it is not possible to tell in advance how many women with abnormal changes to the cervix will go on to develop cancer if left untreated. Around 100,000 women are referred to colposcopy clinics each year for further assessment and/or treatment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths and what proportion of all deaths of women aged over 40 years were from cervical cancer in each year since 1975; and what assessment he has made of the measurable effect of screening on the death rate. [38764]

Mr. Boateng: The number and proportion of deaths in women aged over 40 years from cervical cancer have fallen dramatically since 1975. In particular, the number of deaths from cervical cancer has fallen by a third since the National Health Service cervical screening programme was set up in 1988, as the table shows:

Year	Cervical cancer deaths of women aged over 40	Cervical cancer as percentage of all deaths to women aged over 40
1975	2,008	0.72
1976	2,076	0.72
1977	1,998	0.72
1978	1,978	0.70
1979	1,919	0.67
1980	1,872	0.67
1981	1,810	0.65
1982	1,733	0.61
1983	1,743	0.62
1984	1,690	0.61
1985	1,709	0.59
1986	1,747	0.61
1987	1,644	0.59
1988	1,712	0.61
1989	1,579	0.55
1990	1,554	0.55
1991	1,457	0.51
1992	1,487	0.52
1993	1,319	0.45
1994	1,217	0.44
1995	1,158	0.40
1996	1,156	0.41

Cervical screening is estimated to prevent between 1,100 and 3,900 cases of invasive cervical cancer each year (Imperial Cancer Research Fund), and the death rate from cervical cancer is currently falling by seven per cent. each year.

Section 64 Funding

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the beneficiaries of the most recent section 64 allocations of funding; if he will list the criteria by which section 64 applications are judged; and when applications for the next round of section 64 funding will be invited. [38798]

Mr. Boateng: A list of new and renewal section 64 grant awards for 1998–99 approved by the Department's Ministers has been placed in the Library.

The awards were determined by reference to the extent to which it was considered they will help to meet the Department's objectives and priorities. Each application was considered on its merits.

Application forms for the next annual section 64 round will be issued in July, to be returned to the Department by 1 October 1998.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instigate an immediate inquiry into age discrimination in the delivery of health services. [38991]

Mr. Boateng: The Government's commitment to promoting a fair and equitable health service is set out in the 1998/99 priorities and planning guidance for the National Health Service. Whatever the age of the patient, there are no exceptions to the fundamental principle that the NHS is there to provide services for everybody on the basis of clinical need. The White Paper The New NHS also sets out our proposals for a new national performance framework for the NHS which will focus on six areas of performance selected to capture what really counts for patients and staff. One of these six areas will be that of fair access to health services in relation to people's needs, irrespective of geography, class, ethnicity, age or sex.

In response to the recent campaign by the Observer newspaper entitled "Dignity on the Ward", which raised the issue of age discrimination in the delivery of health services, amongst other things, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has commissioned HAS 2000 (formerly the Health Advisory Service) to examine the care which acute hospitals provide for older people. HAS 2000 are expected to look at the care which acute hospitals provide for older people nationwide, and examine one or two hospitals in greater detail. They will report directly to my right hon. Friend, who plans to publish their report. The study will be undertaken between January and June 1998.

Mental Health

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the guidelines for the Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services Fund, separately identifying the (a) criteria for inviting bids, (b) factors to be considered in evaluating bids and (c) timescale for bidding and implementation; and if he will make a statement. [39008]

Mr. Boateng: We expect to publish guidance in May giving full information about the specific grant to local authorities, in partnership with linked health authorities, for development of services for children and adolescents with a mental illness.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the needs not currently met from existing provision in respect of children's and adolescents' mental health care; what proportion of these needs will be met by the CAMHS Fund; what measures he plans to meet these needs in areas where CAMHS Fund money is not allocated; and if he will make a statement. [39007]

Mr. Boateng: We are aware of the variations in service provision for children and young people with mental health problems across the country. Social care regions, jointly with regional offices of the National Health Service Executive, have undertaken a number of region-wide surveys of provision for child and adolescent mental health services. They will enable appropriate action to be taken to help ensure a more even spread of service provision. Priorities for action have to be decided locally in the light of the assessed needs of the local population.

The child and adolescent mental health services fund is not aimed at filling gaps in existing services. It is intended to help support a small number of innovative pilot projects designed to develop good practice. Bids from local authorities, agreed with partner health authorities, will be invited shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences for arms have been granted to United Kingdom firms since September 1997; and in respect of which countries of destination. [33831]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 10 March 1998]: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows for the period between 13 November 1997 and 2 February 1998 inclusive. 4,014 Standard Individual Export Licences and 55 Open Individual Export Licences were issued for the export of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List"). These licences covered exports to consignees and/or end-users in the following countries:

Afghanistan, Angola, Netherlands Antilles, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bermuda, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei, Bulgaria, Canada, Cayman Islands, Channel Islands, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Cambodia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Estonia, the Falkland Islands, Finland, France, French Guiana, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Gibraltar, Greece, Grenada, Guyana, Hong Kong SAR, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Laos, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macau, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Namibia, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the People's Republic of China, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Russia, Rwanda, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, South Korea, Spain, Sri Lanka, St. Helena, St. Vincent, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, Taiwan, Tanzania, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, the United Arab Emirates, the United States of America, Uruguay, Venezuela, Vietnam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

The list necessarily takes no account of Media OIELs, which are Open Individual Export Licences that authorise the export to any destination of protective clothing for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists working in areas of conflict.

The Government are committed to report annually on strategic export controls and their application.

London Art Market

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the principal EU regulations and directives which affect the London art market; and what further measures are anticipated. [37416]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The principal EU regulations and directives which affect the London art market are as follows:

Customs and VAT Directives

Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 2454/93 which implements the Community Customs Code (Council Regulation (EEC) No. 92/2913, Council Regulation (EEC) No. 918/83, Council Directive 83/181/EEC and the Sixth VAT Directive (77/388/EEC) as amended by the Seventh VAT Directive (94/5/EC). Their effect is thus:

Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 2454/93

Article 682 suspends the payment of customs duty and import VAT for second-hand goods temporarily imported for sale by auction and also works of art, collectors' items, and antiques temporarily removed for exhibition, with a view to possible sale.

Other measures include the following:

Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3911/92 of 9 December 1992 on the export of cultural goods; Council Regulation (EC) No. 2469/96 of 16 December 1996 amending the Annex to Regulation (EEC) No. 3911/92 on the export of cultural goods; Council Directive 93/7 EEC of 15 March 1993 on the return of cultural objects unlawfully removed from the territory of a Member State; Directive 96/100/EEC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 February 1997 amending the Annex to Directive 93/7/EEC on the return of cultural objects unlawfully removed from the territory of a Member State. However, the latter two have not been used to date.

Council Regulation (EEC) No. 918/83 and Council Directive 83/181/EEC

Article 51 of Regulation 918/83 and Article 79(r) of Directive 83/181 provide relief from customs duty and import VAT respectively, under certain conditions, for items imported by approved museums of galleries for their collections.

Sixth VAT Directive

Article 16(E) enables relief from VAT on the sale of temporarily imported works of art and second-hand goods. Article 26a allows VAT on the sale of eligible works of art to be calculated by reference to the profit margin instead of the full sales value. Article 28 (1)a enables the UK to apply until 30 June 1999 an effective 2.5% VAT rate on the importation of works of art, collectors' items, or antiques which had been relieved from VAT before the implementation of the Seventh VAT Directive (94/5/EC). No further measures are anticipated in this area.

Copyright

In the field of copyright, the principal measure is an amended proposal (still under negotiation) for a European Parliament and Council Directive on the resale right for the benefit of an author of an original work of art—Com (1998) 78 final. No further measures are anticipated in this area.

Sale of Consumer Goods

A draft Directive on the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees, which would harmonise at a minimum level consumers' sale of goods rights, is currently being negotiated. The Directive, unlike UK law, does not make any special provision for the liability of sellers at auction and could have an adverse effect on the sale of goods—including art and antiques—at auction. However, the UK is seeking a derogation that would allow Member States to exclude used goods sold at auction.

Trade in Endangered Species

The Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) controls international trade of specimens of species listed in its appendices—including antiques. In the EU, it is given legal force by Council Regulation EC No. 338/97 and Commission Regulation EC No. 939/97. These regulations set out the rules for the import, export, re-export, sale and movement of species to which the controls apply. The regulation on trade is based on a system of permits and certificates which may only be issued where certain conditions are met. No further measures are anticipated in this area.

Electricity Trading Arrangements

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the review of electricity trading arrangements to be completed. [38830]

Mr. Battle: I expect to receive advice in July from the Director General of Electricity Supply on proposals for new electricity trading arrangements.

Independent Booksellers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of independent booksellers (i) in 1987 and (ii) at the current date; and what assessment he has made of the impact on the traditional book trade of the growth of new retail outlets. [38748]

Mr. Battle: There are no official statistics available for the number of independent booksellers in 1987 or currently. Data produced by the Office for National Statistics (reference SDA25) are available for certain years for booksellers (businesses whose main sales are new or second-hand books) as follows:

Year	Businesses	Outlets
1986	2,567	3,175
1988	2,271	3,096
1990	2,323	3,495
1991	2,016	3,280
1992	2,195	3,790

The intermediate surveys in 1987 and 1989 did not provide results by detailed kind of business. After 1992, the results have been published on the basis of the Standard Industrial Classification (92), which combines booksellers with newsagents. However, these results do not give an analysis by number of outlets so it is not possible to estimate the number of independent booksellers.

I am aware of several factors affecting book sales at present, including the growth of new outlets, but no assessment has been made of their possible impact on the traditional booktrade. My Department is currently supporting the Booksellers Association of Great Britain and Ireland (BA) in its efforts to create an Internet site for the benefit of small and medium booksellers. In another initiative, involving the Publishers Association and the Booksellers Association, the Department has supported a study into book industry supply-chain.

Export Forum

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution her Department made to the budget of the Export Forum in the last financial year. [38881]

Mrs. Roche: The Department spent a total of £17,000 on the publication of the Export Forum report and on the travel expenses and refreshment of Forum members. A small amount of resource was also spent on photocopying costs and other small items of office support for the Forum, but it is not possible to separate this out from the generality of Departmental expenditure.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent information she has received from the UKAEA in respect of the adequacy of the storage capacity for radioactive waste at Dounreay. [38901]

Mr. Battle: DTI receive regular reports from UKAEA which include projections of storage capacity. These are used by UKAEA to plan future storage facilities. Indications are that extra storage facilities will be required for immobilised Intermediate Level Waste by mid-2000. Work on storage facilities to house the waste to be retrieved from the Dounreay Shaft and Wet Silo will commence in about 2008.

Coal Contracts

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she hopes to conclude the Government's review of coal contracts and related matters. [39006]

Mr. Battle: The Government are undertaking a review of energy sources for power generation. Its terms of reference were set out in my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. King) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 519–20. The review is expected to reach conclusions before 30 June.

Newspaper Prices

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received regarding predatory pricing of national newspapers. [37424]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department has received a number of representations relating to complaints about pricing practices in the newspaper industry, and about the amendment to the Competition Bill relating to newspapers which was passed in the other place. These representations have been from members of the public, newspaper undertakings, and Members of both Houses. It is for the Director General of Fair Trading to consider specific complaints about anti-competitive practices. In relation to the Competition Bill, the Government have made clear their view that the amendment accepted in the other place is unnecessary and unworkable.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Feltham Young Offenders Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides have occurred in Feltham Young Offenders Unit in each of the last five years. [38156]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table. This is shown as reported incidents of self-injury rather than attempted suicides since, as of 1 April 1997, the Prison Service now records incidents under this broader definition.

In interpreting the statistics on reported incidents of self-injury, it should be borne in mind that a single prisoner can accumulate more than one incident of self-injury. There have also been changes to recording and the definitions in establishments over time. Research is being conducted to identify more consistent methods of recording and monitoring self-injury.

Self-inflicted deaths and incidents of self-injury at Feltham YOI 1993–94—1997–98

Young Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 391, to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), how many of the 277 young men held in adult prisons were aged 15 and 16 years; which prisons they were held in; and what was the number of 15 and 16 year olds held in each prison. [38587]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table. Of the 66 persons identified as being held in adult prisons, all are normally accommodated separately from adult prisoners.

Ms Quin: The available information relates to the remand prison population of 15 and 16 year olds in England and Wales on the last day of the month and is given in the table.

Crime and Disorder Bill

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the categories of the persons and bodies referred to in section 6(2)(c) of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] which he intends to prescribe by order. [38583]

Mr. Michael: We have not yet finally decided which persons or bodies will be prescribed under this power. A number of suggestions were made during the consultation period on our proposals for new statutory crime and disorder reduction partnerships, and we are currently considering these.

Enforced Subject Access

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce proposals to halt the practice of enforced subject access; and if he will make a statement. [38416]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are committed to dealing with the problem of enforced subject access in the context of the Data Protection Bill. We intend to bring forward proposals at Committee Stage.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) of 15 December 1997, Official Report, columns 11–12, on animal experiments, what actions he has requested regulators of safety testing in the United Kingdom to carry out to attempt to reduce the number of animals used in safety tests. [38524]

Mr. George Howarth: Following a series of meetings at the Home Office, United Kingdom regulators have agreed to a statement of principle that any suffering caused to animals and the number of animals used in a safety evaluation protocol, should be the lowest necessary to achieve its identified objectives.

To this end, they have agreed to:

1. encourage the development of alternative methods through co-operation with or participation in national and international initiatives aimed at refining, reducing or replacing the use of animals;
2. seek to influence international harmonisation initiatives to ensure that policies and practices take full account of the ethical duty to protect the welfare and minimise the numbers of animals used in safety assessments;
3. alert applicants/clients to instances where data submitted in support of registration on safety evaluation are considered excessive in terms of animal suffering or numbers, or where internationally accepted alternatives replacing, reducing or refining animal use have not been employed;
4. accept for assessment internationally recognised, non-animal alternative tests conducted to appropriate standards; and
5. not require repetition of data produced by the applicant for other safety evaluation agencies where such data accord with internationally accepted guidelines and have been generated in compliance with appropriate standards.

A further meeting will take place later this month between Home Office officials and the regulators to discuss the progress made in implementing these principles and in promoting them to overseas regulators.

Firearms

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Desmond Tallent of Hurlingham Road, Stafford will receive the balance of his compensation for the handguns he surrendered last year. [38413]

Mr. Michael: The Firearms Compensation Section is at present concentrating its efforts on clearing the remaining claims received under Options A and B of the compensation scheme, and this work is expected to be completed by about the end of May. The balance of the compensation due to Mr. Tallent under Option C of the scheme should be paid soon after that.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for the most recent year for which figures are available, broken down by month, the numbers of unlicensed firearms entering the United Kingdom, excluding the Province of Northern Ireland; [39038]

(2) how many unlicensed firearms he estimates are in current circulation in the United Kingdom, excluding the Province of Northern Ireland. [39037]

Mr. Michael: There is no reliable estimate of the number of illegal firearms in circulation, or of those entering the United Kingdom and escaping detection.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases to date have been brought against Her Majesty's Government in respect of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997, in (a) the European Court of Justice and (b) the European Court of Human Rights. [39036]

Mr. Michael: Although the Government have had no formal notification of any case arising from the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997, lodged either with the European Court of Justice or the European Court of Human Rights, we have had sight of two applications to the latter Court.

Small Claims

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in (i) the last year and (ii) the previous five years small claims court hearings have taken place in HM prisons. [38589]

Ms Quin: Small claims hearings are known to have been held in five prisons. These have occurred infrequently and not all the prisons involved have maintained separate records of the hearings.

Four hearings have been confirmed as having been held in the last year and three in the previous five years.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the circumstances leading up to the holding of a small claims court hearing in HM Prison Long Lartin; and what was the total cost to public funds of the hearing. [38590]

Ms Quin: Three small claims courts have been convened at Long Lartin prison over the last year in order to hear a total of ten cases brought by prisoners. Most, but not all, cases are brought against the prison mainly for property-related issues. Prisoners have the same rights as any citizen to make applications to the court and, whilst hearings such as this are not frequent occurrences, neither are they unusual.

Holding hearings within the prison, rather than at the county court, is both more secure and reduces significantly the overall costs by removing the need for the involvement of expensive police and prison escorts. Wherever possible, the court will schedule different cases from the prison to be heard on the same day in order to reduce costs further.

Records are not kept of the cost of convening small claims courts at Long Lartin prison and cannot be estimated with any accuracy.

Civil Justice (Prisoner Access)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on access to civil justice for prisoners serving custodial sentences when the matters in dispute relate to the Prison Service. [38588]

Ms Quin: A prisoner who seeks access to civil justice in a dispute relating to the Prison Service is treated in exactly the same manner as a prisoner who seeks such access in any other dispute. Prisoners' rights in this respect are set out in Rules 37 and 37A of the Prison Rules 1964 (as amended) and Rules 13 and 14 of the Young Offender Institution Rules 1988 (as amended). Guidance on the implementation of these Rules is given to governors in Standing Order 5. Copies of all these documents are available in the Library.

Police Funding

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the capital allocations to police authorities (a) for 1998–99 and (b) for 1997–98 indicating the percentage change between the two years in ranking order of percentage change. [38540]

Mr. Michael: The information available is in the table. The percentage difference between the two years has been calculated on the minor works capital allocations only. These are allocated by formula. The major capital allocations are made to individual building projects and reflect individual building timetables and are not directly comparable.

UK Detention Services

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts there are currently between his Department and UK Detention Services; what was the starting date of each contract; what is the completion date for each contract; and if he will make a statement. [38665]

Ms Quin: The Home Office currently has one contract with the United Kingdom Detention Services which was placed by the Prison Service and is for the management of Blakenhurst Prison. The contract commenced on 26 May 1993 and was initially to run for five years, but has since been extended until 25 May 2001 as announced in a reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedford (Mr. Hall) on 19 June 1997, Official Report, columns 247–49.

False Passport Offences

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals were arrested and charged with false passport offences during 1997; how many of those were subsequently imprisoned; what was the average length of sentence; how many were subsequently detained on completion of their sentence; and if he will make a statement. [38660]

Mr. Michael: Under section 26(1)(d) of the Immigration Act 1971 a foreign national shall be guilty of a criminal offence if, without lawful authority, he alters any certificate of entitlement, entry clearance, work permit or other document made under or for the purpose of the Act; or has in his possession any passport, certificate of entitlement, entry clearance, work permit or other document which is known or he has reasonable cause to believe to be false.

Detailed information on arrests and charges by offence is not collected centrally. Information held on the Home Office Court Proceedings database for 1996 (latest available) shows nine prosecutions and five convictions under section 26(1)(d) of the Act. Only one offender was given a custodial sentence (of one month—although this was not coupled with a recommendation for deportation). However it is also possible that other legislation, which does not refer exclusively to passports, may be used to deal with foreign nationals arrested for this type of crime.

Bridgend and Fazakerley Prisons

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the public sector comparator against which the Prison Service has calculated the costs of the prisons built and managed under the private finance initiative at Bridgend and Fazakerley; what assumptions are used by the comparator; at what stage it was calculated; and if he will make a statement. [38661]

Ms Quin: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 19 December 1997, Official Report, columns 367–68.

Television Licence Fines

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women received a custodial sentence for non-payment of a fine imposed for not paying for a television licence, in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [38746]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table. Information on fine defaulters, by offence, is published in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Table 7.3 of the 1996 edition, Cm 3732), a copy of which is in the Library.

Gaming Industry

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Gaming Act 1968 in controlling the gaming industry, with regard to the use of technology introduced since 1993; [38784]

(2) if he will order a review of the gaming and lottery industry; [38785]

(3) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 in achieving its purpose of keeping lotteries crime free. [38782]

Mr. George Howarth: The present controls meet their primary purpose of keeping gaming crime-free, though the Government are aware of calls to modernise them. We have not ruled that out, but would need to consider the timing, scope and resource implications of such an exercise.

We have no plans to order a review of the gaming and lottery industry as a separate exercise.

Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will update the advice to police authorities and chief constables on recruiting a multi-racial police service; and if he will publish it. [39170]

Mr. Michael: The Inspectorate's thematic inspection report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspectorate of Constabulary "Winning the Race. Policing Plural Communities" which was published in October 1997 (copies of which are in the Library), includes "a guide to assist forces in the area of ethnic minority recruitment" which should provide a helpful checklist of action for forces to take. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he expects each police force in England and Wales to consider the conclusions of the report and to act on its findings during the course of 1998. Later this year chief constables will be asked to report on action taken.

No specific advice is issued to police authorities and chief constables on recruiting a multi-racial police service but it is the responsibility of chief officers of police forces in England and Wales, with the assistance of their police authorities, to ensure that their forces represent the communities they serve. Each chief officer is responsible for the recruitment of officers to his or her force, including initiatives to encourage greater numbers of people from ethnic minorities to join. Home Office police recruitment literature expresses the total commitment to create a police service which reflects the diversity of Britain's population in the late 1990s.

Postal Votes

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the practice of general practitioners charging their patients to verify an application for a postal vote. [38930]

Mr. George Howarth: Under their terms of service, General Practitioners are required to issue certain certificates to their patients free of charge. These include attestations for an absent vote on grounds of physical incapacity.

If a patient is charged a fee for this service, and is unable to resolve the matter with the doctor concerned, the local Health Authority has the power to investigate such complaints and take appropriate action.

Family Passports (Abolition)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what forecast he has made of the likely increase in revenue over each of the next five years as a result of the abolition of the family passport. [38793]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The United Kingdom Passport Agency estimate that the requirement for all under 16 year olds to have their own passports from 5 October this year will increase revenue by £4.4 million in each of the next five years. This additional revenue will be required to recover fully the Agency's costs in providing an extra 400,000 passports each year to children under 16. Under Treasury rules the Passport Agency is required to recover fully its costs.

Liverpool Nationality Directorate

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to reduce the backlog on immigration nationality work at the Liverpool Nationality Directorate; [38982]

(2) what plans he has to change the nature of the work undertaken at the IND in Liverpool; [38653]

(3) what plans he has for the staffing of the IND at Liverpool for 1999–2000. [38663]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have no plans at present to change the nature of the work undertaken by the Nationality Directorate in Liverpool. The computerisation of the casework process, which is being introduced into the Immigration and Nationality Directorate later this year, would allow eventually for some additional non-nationality work to be undertaken in Liverpool, but the staff there would need to be trained to process such work and we have no plans for this at present. The immediate goal is to reduce the present backlog of nationality applications awaiting determination. Recent organisational and procedural changes should help to reduce the number of outstanding applications.

The plans for 1999–2000 have not yet been settled.

Prisoners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average number of prisoners held per prison in England and Wales. [39161]

Abandoned Cars

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory authority is provided to what bodies and under what circumstances to tow away abandoned cars. [38745]

Mr. Michael: The legislative provisions governing the removal of vehicles are contained in the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978 and the Disposal of Vehicle Regulations 1986. Under the 1986 Regulations, the police have powers to remove vehicles abandoned without lawful authority which are left in breach of local traffic regulation orders or left where they are causing an obstruction or likely to cause a danger.

Where vehicles are not illegally parked but otherwise appear to be abandoned, the responsibility for removing and ultimately disposing of them rests with local authorities. They have a duty under the 1978 Act to remove any vehicle abandoned on the highway without legal authority and must follow the procedures laid down in the 1986 Regulations before doing so.

The Removal and Disposal of Vehicles Regulations 1986 provides that seven days' prior notice must be given of a local authority's intention to remove such a vehicle which, in their opinion, is in such a condition that it ought to be destroyed. However, a 21 days' notice period must be given where an abandoned vehicle does not appear to be in a condition meriting its destruction. These safeguards are intended to protect owners against a local authority prematurely assuming a vehicle is abandoned and having it towed away for scrap. They also ensure that local authorities do not have to go through the unnecessary procedure of removing and storing vehicles that may not have been abandoned.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each (a) county council, (b) metropolitan district council, (c) unitary authority and (d) London borough council, the total amount of grant aid given to such authorities for emergency planning in each of the years 1995–96, 1996–97, 1997–98 and provision for 1998–99. [39155]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the tables.

[39158]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is set out in the table. The capital expenditure has been incurred to meet necessary infrastructure improvements at the Emergency Planning College. The Home Office pays capital grant to the BBC for the development of a national warning system based around radio and television.

[39156]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what income his Department has received in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 and expects to receive in 1998–99 from the disposal of (a) land and property and (b) equipment, formerly used or held for emergency planning or civil defence purposes; and if he will make a statement. [39159]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table. Income from the disposal of land and property relates to the sale of former civil defence premises. Income from the disposal of equipment relates to the sale of surplus vehicles and equipment from the Emergency Fire Service stockpile. The income has been returned to the Consolidated Fund; with the exception that, last year, some receipts were used to fund the reception arrangements, at Heathrow and Gatwick airports, for evacuees from Montserrat.

Women's Royal Voluntary Service

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his Department's grants to the Women's Royal Voluntary Service for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and provision for 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [39154]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office has provided grant in aid to the Women's Royal Voluntary Service (WRVS) since its inception in 1938. The levels of grant for the years in question were as follows:

Year	Amount
1995–96	6,200,000
1996–97	5,840,000
1997–98	5,548,000
1998–99	5,298,000

With some 120,000 volunteers, WRVS is the largest provider of volunteering opportunities in the United Kingdom. It also remains by far the largest single grant recipient from the Department's main grants programme to voluntary and community organisations. This year it will receive nearly half (46 per cent.) of the total budget available.

Following a review of the organisation, published by the Compass Partnership in 1997, it was agreed that WRVS should become self-financing within ten years. The level of Home Office grant will therefore continue to decline, making it possible for us to implement the Public Accounts Committee's recommendation of 1996 to devote a larger share of our funding to new ventures. The WRVS continues to make great strides in the modernisation of its legal, financial and organisational infrastructure and in the development of its services in this, its diamond jubilee year.

Custodial Sentences (Women)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many women were sentenced to custodial sentences in Wales in 1997 and in each of the previous 10 years; [38947]

(2) how many women have been sentenced to custodial sentences in Wales in the first three months of 1998. [38948]

Mr. Michael: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings database is given in the table for the years 1987 to 1996. Data for 1997 will not be available until this autumn, with 1998 figures becoming available in the autumn of the next year.

[1] Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 custodial penalties are available from the common minimum age of 15 for both boys and girls (previously the minimum age was 14 for boys and 15 for girls). Immediate custody includes detention in a young offender institution, unsuspended imprisonment and partly suspended imprisonment (before 1 October 1992).

[2] Children convicted at the Crown Court may be sentenced to be detained for up to the adult maximum, including life, under Section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 as amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Eddie Gilfoyle

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Merseyside on (a) the disciplinary action against officers involved in the Eddie Gilfoyle case recommended by the Police Complaints Authority, (b) the date on which Merseyside Police received the PCA report, (c) the date set for disciplinary hearings and (d) the reason for the delay. [38831]

Mr. Michael: Two Merseyside police officers have been charged with disciplinary offences of neglect of duty and falsehood arising from allegations about the investigation of the murder of Mr. Gilfoyle's wife. Following an investigation of the allegations by Lancashire Constabulary, supervised by the Police Complaints Authority (PCA), the PCA announced in November 1995 that it had agreed disciplinary charges proposed by the Merseyside Police. Before these charges could be heard, further complaints were received about the case which led to a PCA-supervised investigation by Cheshire Constabulary. The PCA announced in March last year that it had again agreed the force's disciplinary recommendations and the hearings are now due to take place next month. I understand that the force originally planned to hold a hearing in December 1997, but that non-availability of the officers' legal counsel led to further delay. My hon. Friend will be aware of the response made by my right hon. Friend to the report of the Home Affairs Select Committee, which my hon. Friend chairs and we will continue to examine ways of avoiding the unacceptable levels of delay in the police discipline system.

Voter Turnout

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to increase voter turnout for (a) local elections and (b) general elections among young people; and if he will make a statement. [38970]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are committed to encouraging greater voter participation at elections at all levels and by all sections of society. This is why the Working Party on Electoral Procedures, which I chair, will be examining ways to improve voter turnout, especially among young people.

Prison Drug Strategy

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the review on prison service drug strategy. [38808]

Mr. George Howarth: The review of the Prison Service Drug Strategy is almost complete. It will be published in the very near future.

Anti-social Behaviour

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of measures to deal with anti-social behaviour to be completed. [38807]

Mr. Michael: A project on the police response to anti-social behaviour is currently being carried out by the Home Office Police Research Group. An initial report is due in early summer, with a follow-up evaluation of how well the police are doing in reducing anti-social behaviour later in the year.

A number of tough new measures to deal with anti-social behaviour are contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill, currently before Parliament and expected to receive Royal Assent this summer. These include Anti-Social Behaviour Orders, Child Safety Orders, local child curfews, and statutory crime prevention partnerships between local authorities and the police.

Community Fire Safety

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of community fire safety to be completed. [38806]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Borrow) on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 212. The Government received the report of the Community Fire Safety Task Force last autumn and made arrangements for it to be published on 3 November 1997. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

I announced the Government's response to the Task Force report in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) on 7 April 1998, Official Report, column 177.

Sex Offenders

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of measures to deal with protection of communities from known sex offenders to be completed. [38818]

Mr. Michael: We are working on a range of measures to protect the public from further offending by convicted sex offenders. We have implemented the automatic life sentence in the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 for second time serious sexual offences. We have implemented the requirement in the Sex Offenders Act 1997 for convicted sex offenders to register with the police. The Crime and Disorder Bill provides for extended supervision of sex offenders by the Probation Service after release from prison, and for the courts to make a sex offender order, breach of which will be punishable by imprisonment. We shall also consider the need for further legislative changes in the context of policy developments in the management of offenders with severe personality disorder.

Civil Protection

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of the future role of local civil protection in England and Wales to be completed. [38829]

Mr. George Howarth: A working document "The future role and funding of local civil protection in England and Wales" was issued in November 1997 as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review in the Home Office.

Her Majesty's Government are considering the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review across all Government Departments. I can confirm that approval has been given for the development of National Standards for civil protection which local authorities and other primary stakeholders will be consulted upon in due course.

Prison Nursing Services

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of prison nursing services to be completed. [38811]

Ms Quin: The consultation period on the nursing policy paper circulated on 21 October 1997 closed on 20 February 1998. The results of the consultation provided much useful feedback but produced no consensus on the proposals.

The position and role of nurses in the provision of health care to prisoners also forms part of the remit of the Joint Prison Service/National Health Service (NHS) Working Group established last autumn. The Joint Group is tasked to look at the broader question of the organisation of prisoners' health care, including whether the NHS should become the provider. The results of the consultation on the nursing policy paper are helping to inform the deliberations of the Joint Group and are being taken forward in the context of that work.

Firefighters Pension Scheme

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the review on the firefighters pension scheme. [38809]

Mr. George Howarth: The review was published on 31 March. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave that day to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Clark), Official Report, columns 466–67.

Youth Justice

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of Government proposals for youth justice to be completed. [38816]

Mr. Michael: The results of the initial review are reflected in the Crime and Disorder Bill and the White Paper "No More Excuses" (Cm 3809). A considerable amount of work is being undertaken to make the youth justice system effective in preventing offending and reoffending and to prepare for implementation of our proposed reforms. I am pleased to say that the reforms are receiving very positive support and co-operation from the police and from local authorities and other interested parties.

Public Entertainment Licensing

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the review of public entertainment licensing. [38824]

Mr. George Howarth: A deregulation review of public entertainments licensing was undertaken during 1996 by the previous Government. I have not yet had an opportunity to look closely at the issues arising out of that review, but I hope to be able to make my views known within the next few months.

Human Rights Bill

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet lay members of the General Synod of the Church of England to discuss the implications of the Human Rights Bill [Lords]. [38928]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has had a number of meetings about the implications of the Human Rights Bill for the Churches. These included a full discussion with the Bishop of Ripon and officials of the General Synod on 9 March. My right hon. Friend understands the strength of feeling about this issue but he does not believe that a further meeting with lay members would add significantly to the points that have been made.

Fire Service

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many service firefighters there are in each fire authority; and how many of these are women. [38651]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Stringer) on 1 December 1997, Official Report, columns 58–82.

Nuclear Smuggling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the agencies in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Union responsible for monitoring, intercepting and prosecuting in respect of incidences of alleged nuclear smuggling. [38733]

Mr. Michael: The agencies which could be involved, in the United Kingdom are: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the relevant local police force, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Constabulary, the security and intelligence agencies, the Environment Agency, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Directorate of Civil Nuclear Security, the Ministry of Defence Atomic Weapons Establishment and the Crown Prosecution Service, depending on the nature of any incident.

International efforts to prevent or to track and prosecute nuclear smuggling are primarily taken forward in fora with a wider membership than the European Union. All member states of the European Union participate, on a national basis, in the collection and sharing of information on confirmed trafficking incidents through the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Prison Television Services

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons have access to Sky television sports channels for prisoners. [38940]

Ms Quin: There is no readily available information about the number of Prison Service establishments which provide Sky television for prisoners, or which of the available channels they subscribe to. Some prisons subscribe to satellite sports channels, and allow prisoners access during set periods of association with each other. The costs are not met from public funds but from a prison's general purpose fund: this is derived from prisoners' own contributions from their prison earnings, and from prison shop profits and external donations.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 285, and 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 516, when a decision about the future of in-cell television will be made. [38965]

Ms Quin: The review of policy in this area is nearing completion, and we hope to make an announcement shortly.

Ministerial Prison Visits

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons (a) he and (b) his Ministers have visited since 1 May 1997. [38935]

Ms Quin: Since 1 May 1997, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has visited eight prisons. I have visited twenty seven prisons since 1 May and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Minister for Knowsley, North and Sefton East (Mr. Howarth) has visited fourteen. Additionally, my hon. Friend The Minister of State has visited two prisons.

Maidstone Prison

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit Maidstone Prison. [38937]

Ms Quin: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I currently have any plans to visit Maidstone prison.

Learmont Report

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on further implementation of the Learmont report. [38936]

Ms Quin: The Learmont report made 127 recommendations about prison security and the management of the Prison Service. Of these, 112 have been accepted and implemented in full or in part and 13 have been rejected. Decisions remain outstanding on two recommendations (63 and 121) and one part-recommendation (66).

Asylum Applications

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum appeals were still awaiting resolution on (a) 1 April 1997 and (b) 1 April 1998; [38939]

(2) how many asylum applications were still awaiting resolution on (a) 1 April 1997 and (b) 1 April 1998. [38938]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the number of outstanding cases relates to the position at the end of the month rather than the beginning.

The table shows the number of asylum applications awaiting an initial decision, and the number of asylum related appeals awaiting determination at the end of March 1997 and 1998.

Applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, and Appeals which are outstanding at 31 March 1997 and 31 March 1998.

	Number of principal applicants
Year	Applications outstanding	Appeals outstanding
31 March 1997	54,950	23,215
31 March 1998	50,950	23,760

[1] Figures are provisional and rounded to the nearest five.

The backlog of applications has been cut by almost 4,000, but in some of these cases the applicant has appealed, increasing the number of outstanding appeals. The number of appeals determined by adjudicators increased by 31 per cent. from 15,385 in the year to March 1997 to 22,185 in the year to March 1998.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Focus Groups

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the Head of the Home Civil Service has published guidance (a) generally, (b) on tendering procedures and (c) on publication of the findings to Ministers in respect of qualitative and quantitative research with particular reference to focus groups. [38216]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 7 April 1998]: It is for individual Departments to determine their needs for research and focus groups. No specific guidance has been issued. Where tendering is involved, Departments will take account of guidance on procurement policy and practice issued by the Treasury.

Medical Insurance

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list Government (a) departments and (b) agencies which provide private medical insurance to staff. [38650]

Dr. David Clark: It is not Government policy to provide civil servants with medical health insurance, or other benefits in kind, as part of their remuneration package. There is a central rule, set out in the Civil Service Management Code, that civil servants should not normally receive fringe benefits of this kind.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions Provision Group

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the report of the Pensions Provision Group will be published. [39163]

Mr. Denham: To inform our review of pensions, the independent Pension Provision Group have been asked to determine the current level of pension provision in the UK, and likely future trends. The Group's report will bring together in one document an up-to-date analysis of all forms of pension provision. It will provide an authoritative basis upon which we will be able to shape our plans to ensure that today's and tomorrow's pensioners have a decent income in retirement.

We expect the report to be published soon.

Multiple Sclerosis

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people with multiple sclerosis who are claimants of the higher rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance, and assessed as being (a) totally unable to walk, (b) virtually unable to walk and (c) in a condition where the exertion required to walk would constitute a danger to life or be likely to lead to a serious deterioration in health. [37900]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as set out.

On the basis of a 5 per cent. sample of cases at 30 November 1997, there are around 43,500 recipients of the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance whose main disabling condition is multiple sclerosis. Almost half of these are recorded as being unable or virtually unable to walk, but records do not show the grounds for awarding benefit to some claimants who previously received Mobility Allowance.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of attendance allowance have multiple sclerosis. [37901]

Mr. Denham: The number of claimants of Attendance Allowance who have multiple sclerosis is 4,100. This figure relates to people claiming Attendance Allowance at 30 November 1997 and is for those whose main disabling condition is multiple sclerosis.

Source:

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who are claimants of disability living allowance are in (a) receipt of lifetime awards and (b) renewal awards; and how many in each category are people with multiple sclerosis. [37899]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

People in receipt of Disability Living Allowance[1]

Multiple Sclerosis	41,400	3,600

Lone Parents

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many New Deal advisers for lone parents will be in post on (a) 6 April 1998 and (b) 1 October 1998; and, of those, how many will be recruited from (i) the Benefits Agency, (ii) the Employment Service and (iii) elsewhere. [38104]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Since July last year, 72 Personal Advisers have delivered the first phase of New Deal for Lone Parents, in eight areas across the country. From 6 April, 48 new advisers, together with 66 managers and support staff, join them to deliver the second phase of New Deal for Lone Parents nationally. The second phase represents the period from 6 April to September when New Deal for Lone Parents is extended to all lone parents making a new or repeat claim for Income Support. As numbers being contacted through the New Deal for Lone Parents, the number of Personal Advisers will also rise throughout this period to more than 330 trained Personal Advisers by the end of June.

Preparation for the third phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents—the introduction of a full national programme available to all lone parents—will see further advisers recruited and trained between July and October. By the end of October more than 800 New Deal for Lone Parents Personal Advisers are expected to be in post.

The Personal Advisers for Phase 1—the prototypes for New Deal for Lone Parents—were recruited from within the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service. The Personal Advisers currently working in the Benefits Agency will be offered the chance to transfer to the Employment Service. The majority of Personal Advisers for Phase 2 have been recruited from the Employment Service.

For Phase 3, staff in the Employment Service, Benefits Agency and Child Support Agency will be invited to apply for Personal Adviser posts. The three agencies are currently finalising a framework agreement which will allow this to happen.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents with children aged under five years there are (a) in total and (b) in Scotland for each year since 1979; and what are the forecasts for each year up to the year 2000. [39039]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of lone parents currently claiming (a) income support and (b) family credit who have a child aged (i) under 11, (ii) 11 to 15 and (iii) 16 to 18 years. [38647]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Lone parents with two or more children may appear more than once in each column depending on the ages of their children.

Pensions Education Working Group

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the report of the Pensions Education Working Group will be published. [39162]

Mr. Denham: Developing greater financial literacy and economic awareness is crucial if we are to give everyone the confidence to make informed choices and take control of their financial future.

We are currently considering a number of initial recommendations from the Pensions Education Working Group on how awareness of pensions and financial education could be improved. We have asked the Group to continue to develop their work in a number of key areas.

We will be giving details of the Group's findings and the Government's responses in due course.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations she has had with representatives of the insurance industry concerning the treatment of payments under loan protection insurance policies for recipients of job seeker's allowance; what instructions she is issuing to Department of Social Security staff concerning these payments; and if she will make a statement. [38896]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A series of meetings have been held between officials of this Department and representatives of the insurance and banking industries. In addition, there has been continued and close liaison between officials and officials of the Association of British Insurers and the British Bankers' Association. The Chief Adjudication Officer will be issuing guidance to adjudication officers on revised regulations, which are currently under statutory consultation and will be laid before the House shortly. The Benefits Agency also plans to issue a circular bringing the change to the attention of all staff handling Jobseeker's Allowance and Income Support claims. Guidance will also be issued to Local Authorities, as the change will also apply to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will provide the figures in table 6 of her latest Departmental report for (a) contribution-based JSA, (b) income-based JSA and (c) income support separately for each client group, and identifying lone parents separately in each case. [38941]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out.

Of the 1,190 thousand recipients of income-based Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) as of August 1997, 7,000 were receiving the pensioner premium, 17,000 were receiving the disability premium and 12,000 were receiving the family premium (lone parent).

No information is held on the numbers of lone parents receiving contribution-based JSA. 176,000 people were receiving contribution-based JSA in August 1997.

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision has been made under the Government's welfare-to-work scheme for the transport requirements of people with disabilities when taking up options under the New Deal. [38779]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A major part of the New Deal for Disabled People will be the Personal Adviser pilots, which will operate in 12 areas across Great Britain. The Employment Service's Access to Work scheme will be available to participants: under this scheme disabled people can receive help with transport costs—such as taxi fares—to get to work. In addition local authorities in most parts of the country already offer concessionary fares to disabled people.

The New Deal for 18–24 year olds went nationwide on 6 April and a range of local agreements have been signed with travel operators to enable young people to take advantage of concessionary fares. This will help them get maximum benefit from the New Deal.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 2 April 1998, Official Report, column 670, for what reason her Department's family resources survey does not contain reliable information on pensions; and what plans she has to conduct research into the pension scheme membership of individuals at different income levels. [38473]

Mr. Denham: We are aware that information collected in the Family Resources Survey on pensions needs some refinement, due to high levels of non-response and mis-reporting, and we have commissioned research to help us improve the questions on pensions. We will consider plans for research on pension scheme membership of individuals at different income levels at a later date.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 10 March, Ref: 5/3644/27. [38752]

Mr. Denham: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 14 April.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 25 February, regarding a constituent, Ref: 4/3644/25. [38850]

Mr. Denham: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 15 April 1998.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 26 March 1998, Official Report, columns 276–77, on the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board, what is the remit of the research the board has been commissioned to undertake on deafness in children and young adults; and on what date it is expected (a) to start and (b) to be completed. [38951]

Mr. Denham: The remit of the research is to undertake a study of Disability Living Allowance cases where the main disabling condition is deafness in children and young adults up to age 30. Final details, including the timing, are still to be agreed but work is expected to start following the completion of studies the Board is currently undertaking.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage (a) in numbers and (b) in value of disability benefits paid to those persons over retirement age. [38998]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Percentage of recipients over State retirement age

	By numbers in receipt	By value of benefit received[6]
Attendance Allowance[1]	100	100
Disability Living[1] Allowance	28	28
Invalid Care Allowance[2]	5	5
Severe Disablement[3] Allowance	14	11
Incapacity Benefit[4]	8	8
Disability Working[5] Allowance	0.4	0.4

[1] 5 per cent. data, current allowances at 30 November 1997.
[2] 100 per cent. data, current allowances at 31 December 1997.
[3] 1 per cent. data, current beneficiaries at 31 March 1996.
[4] 5 per cent. data, current beneficiaries at 30 November 1997, excluding a small number of clerical cases not held on the Benefits Agency's computer system.
[5] 100 per cent. data, current recipients at 31 October 199.
[6] Based on 1998 Departmental report figures for 1997–98 expected expenditure outturn.
Percentages are given to the nearest whole number except in the case of Disability Working Allowance as this would give a zero figure which was considered misleading.
In the case of Invalid Care Allowance it is the carer receiving benefit who is over State pension age rather than the disabled person receiving care.
Some claimants can receive more than one of the above disability benefits. The overlaps for all of these benefits cannot be estimated and therefore an overall caseload total for claimants in receipt of one or more of them cannot be given.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the purpose of the survey of the income levels of recipients of disability living allowance; and what is the cost of conducting the survey. [38866]

Mr. Denham: There are no plans to carry out a new survey into the income levels of recipients of Disability Living Allowance. Information on the income levels of benefit recipients, along with other data, is already available from the Family Resources Survey (FRS). Information from the 1996–97 FRS and the follow up disability survey has been merged to provide a comprehensive source of data about the incomes and resources of disabled adults in private households. Results will be published towards the end of 1998.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate her Department has made of the levels of benefit fraud for each benefit, excluding housing benefit, for each year since 1979. [38997]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

The Benefit Review Programme, which began in 1994, was introduced in response to the need for quantitative, statistically valid, information about the extent of fraud and error in Social Security benefits. The table shows the estimated levels of fraud as determined by benefit reviews (excluding Housing Benefit) which have been completed to date. The definition of fraud used to produce the results is currently being evaluated.

The Department has been reviewing its counter fraud strategies, and as part of this work has looked at the whole question of measuring the amount of fraud in the system. We shall be announcing the outcome of this review in due course.

Benefit	Percentage of cases examined where fraud confirmed or strongly suspected	Estimated annual expenditure loss due to fraud (£ million)	Year of benefit review
Income Support (First Review)	9.7	1,409	1994–95
Unemployment Benefit	7.8	86	1994–95
Retirement Pension	up to 0.13	up to 40	1995–96
Invalid Care Allowance	6.5	37	1995–96
Disability Living Allowance	12.2	499	1995–96
Income Support (Second Review)	11.1	1,773	1996–97

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the advertisements taken out (a) on poster sites, (b) in newspapers, (c) on radio and (d) on television to publicise the National Benefit Fraud Hotline since 1 May 1997. [39194]

Mr. Denham: The Department currently operates two national fraud hotlines—the National Benefit Fraud Hotline which has continued to run since May 1997, and the Business Anti-Fraud Hotline which was launched in January 1998.

National Benefit Fraud Hotline

An exercise to evaluate the effectiveness of advertising and publicity for the National Benefit Fraud Hotline is currently underway. As part of this exercise, poster sites are being used in Sheffield; Leeds; Carlisle; and Crewe. Local newspaper advertising and/or inserts are being used in Sheffield; Leeds; Wigan and Bolton; Central Lancashire; West Wales; Wrexham; and the North Wales coast. Local radio advertising is being used in Sheffield; Leeds; Hull; Bedford; and Stevenage. No television advertising has been commissioned.

Business Anti-Fraud Hotline

The Business Anti-Fraud Hotline was launched primarily to help address National Insurance evasion. As part of the launch, 59 quarter page advertisements were placed in the national and regional press, and 37 advertisements were placed in the business and trade press of those industries deemed to be at high risk of National Insurance contributions fraud. No advertisements were taken out on poster sites, on radio or on television.

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated average extra employer national insurance contribution per employee in respect of employees earning over £450 per week that employers will have to pay as a result of the proposals announced in the Budget. [39192]

Mr. Denham: For employees earning over £450 per week, employers will pay an estimated average of £4.68 per week more in National Insurance contributions as a result of the proposals announced in the Budget. For employers as a whole this will be fully offset by a reduction in employer contributions for the great majority of employees earning below this level.

War Pensions

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in which years each of the war pensions for former service personnel who participated in the nuclear tests programmes in Australia and the South Pacific and developed leukaemia, or the widows of such personnel, were awarded. [38648]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

1988	1	5
1989	2	1
1992	—	1
Total	3	8

Note:

Previously published information incorrectly identified an award of war widows pension as one of war disablement pension. This error has been corrected in the above table.

Welfare Profiles

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list all the welfare profiles being compiled by her Department. [38865]

Mr. Field: We published seven Focus Files on 15 January which drew on information compiled and published by the Department of Social Security.

Focus Groups

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 7 April 1998, Official Report, column 223–24, which of the contracts listed was awarded on the basis of a single tender. [39254]

Mr. Field: Three contracts were awarded on the basis of a single tender:

Market Opinion Research International—Attitudes to disability benefits

British Market Research Bureau International Limited—Attitudes towards housing benefits

Alan Hedges—Pensions and Retirement Planning.

The study on Invalidity Benefit and the Contributory Principle, being carried out by the Centre for Research in Social Policy (CRSP) at Loughborough University, forms part of a core-funded programme of work, which was itself competitively tendered.

The following were commissioned using the Central Office of Information's framework agreement with approved suppliers:

Andrew Irving Associates—Counter fraud publicity

One World—New Deal for Lone Parents: development of publicity work

Navigator—Fraud: attitudes to national benefit fraud hotline publicity

Reflexions—Fraud: reporting changes in circumstances

Michael Herbert—Pensions: approaches to information material

Cragg Ross Dawson—New Deal for Lone Parents Newsletter.

All other contracts were awarded following competitive tender exercises.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Waste Disposal

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what volume of waste was imported for disposal into each local authority area in the North West Region in each of the last three years. [38467]

Angela Eagle: Information relating to transnational shipments of waste into and out of England and Wales is collected on behalf of my Department and the Welsh Office by the Environment Agency; this information is no longer collected by local authorities. The Table shows the latest available statistics on the amount of waste imported into the North West region of the Environment Agency for disposal. This does not include imports relating to recovery or recycling operations.

Diabetes (Drivers)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the relative involvement in injury crashes of drivers (i) known in advance and (ii) discovered afterwards to have diabetes. [39167]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 April 1998]: In 1983, the then Senior Medical Adviser at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency reviewed police-reported accidents, finding that insulin-treated diabetes was responsible for 17 per cent. of 1,600 reported accidents involving collapse at the wheel in which the driver survived. An analysis of 100 of those accident cases revealed that 35 per cent. of the drivers had suffered from altered consciousness and 62 per cent. had suffered from complete loss of consciousness. More recent monitoring by the DVLA of information from the police and other sources revealed on average 10 road traffic incidents involving insulin-treated diabetics per month. In neither study is information available on the proportion of drivers who are discovered to suffer from diabetes after they have been involved in an accident or incident.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the numbers of drivers with diabetes, who (a) know and (b) do not know that they have the condition. [39168]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency records indicate that some 100,000 drivers have advised that they have insulin-treated diabetes. The Agency has no information on the number of drivers with diabetes who either have failed to advise DVLA of their condition or are unaware of their condition.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those member states which have obtained an exemption for insulin-dependent drivers from the EU Driving Licence Directive. [39032]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Second EC Directive on Driving Licences (91/439/EEC) does not provide for member states to be granted exemption from its requirements in respect of insulin-dependent drivers.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many insulin-dependent diabetics have been informed to date by the DVLA that they can no longer drive Group C and D vehicles; and how many the agency plans to contact before the end of 1998. [39181]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Drivers whose licences are due for renewal are advised of this in advance by the DVLA. Where such drivers are insulin-dependent, they are being advised that they are no longer eligible to drive category C1 and D1 vehicles. Some 16,500 insulin-dependent diabetic holders of such entitlements have already been so advised. A similar number will be contacted before the end of the year.

Abnormal Loads

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with the power generation and transmission industries regarding possible capital contributions by those industries towards the cost of maintaining a strategic highway network to the 45HB standard; [39041]

(2) what representations he has received for heavy industry regarding the ending of the system of designated routes for abnormal loads; [39045]

(3) for what reasons the Highways Authority has ended the system of designated routes for abnormal loads; and what assessment he has made of the current arrangements; [39044]

(4) what is the division of responsibility between his Department, the Highways Agency and appointed contractors for maintaining a network of road routes suitable for abnormal loads; [39043]

(5) what discussions he has held with the power generation and transmission industries regarding the movement of abnormal loads on public roads. [39046]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 April 1998]: My officials have had a number of meetings with representatives of the power generation and transmission industries, who have made representations on the subject of maintaining a network of road routes suitable for abnormal loads. These discussions have touched on a number of subjects, including current arrangements for meeting the cost of assessment and strengthening work. A further meeting is to take place on 24 April.

My Department is responsible for the policy on the carriage of abnormal loads on roads. The Highways Agency puts this into effect on the motorway and trunk road network in England, and local highway authorities do so on those parts of abnormal load routes lying on local roads. The highway authorities appoint contractors to carry out works on their behalf.

Discussions to date have established that the former designated routes need to be revised because the location of relevant manufacturers, power generation and transmission sites etc. have changed. Also, in some instances, assessments of structures on the network have shown they are no longer capable of carrying the intended loads. The discussions with the industry are intended to identify what arrangements might be appropriate for their current and foreseen needs.

Regional Boundaries

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding boundary changes of the English regions. [39258]

Angela Eagle: In response to our consultation on regional development agencies in England, we received over 1,500 responses. Of the small proportion who commented on the issue of boundaries of the RDAs, the majority supported the Government's decision to base RDA boundaries on the Government Office boundaries, with one RDA covering Merseyside and the North West. Since then, we have received a large number of pro-forma representations seeking a separate regional identity for Cornwall, and a small number of other representations about regional boundaries.

A6 Bypass

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when planning permission was granted for the construction of the PVC spur road onto the A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass; [38977]

(2) what (a) legal and (b) other obstacles there are to the immediate construction of the PVC spur road onto the A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass; [38974]

(3) if his Department has been asked to provide funding towards the construction of the PVC spur road onto the A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass; [38975]

(4) what source of public funds are available to aid the construction of the PVC spur road onto the A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass. [38976]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Tom Levitt, dated 21 April 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the provision by the PVC Group PLC of an access road to their works from the A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith Bypass.

The High Peak Borough Council granted planning permission for the access on 26 February 1997. A condition of the permission, included at the direction of the Secretary of State, is that the access must be completed to DETR design standards. Consultants working for the PVC Group wrote to the Agency on 31 March this year seeking advice on this.

The new access onto the bypass will require works to the trunk road. As with any case of this kind the developer is required to enter into an agreement under Section 278 of the Highways Act 1980 to fund work to the trunk road specified in the agreement. The consultants returned to the Agency on 2 April, the standard forms which we had supplied about a year ago to allow preparation of the agreement.

The Agency has not been asked to make any contribution towards the cost of the access. It is to form a private access to and from the Group's re-processing plant and as such cannot be financed from trunk road funds.

M25

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Highways Agency used the same lane capacity calculation for the M25 in respect of the T5 spur road as it used in the proposals for widening the motorway between junctions 12 and 15; and if he will make a statement. [38750]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 April 1998]: When assessing options for trunk road improvements, the Highways Agency takes into account operational requirements, economic costs and benefits and environmental effects.

In the case of the M25 between J12 and J15, the widening proposals were restricted to dual 5 lanes and dual 6 lanes in order to limit the environmental impact.

These road widths were then used in the computer models for assessing both the M25 widening scheme and the T5 Spur Road.

Evidence on these matters has been given to the Inspector at the Terminal 5 Public Inquiry and he will be making his report to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in due course.

Traffic Congestion (A380)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral answer of 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 1029, concerning the A380, what evidence underlay his statement that Devon County Council will require at least another two years work before a contract can be signed for a PFI scheme. [38846]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Devon County Council have provided the DETR with documentation supporting their case for the A380 Kingskerswell Bypass as a PFI scheme. In that material, the programme timetable envisages contract signature no earlier than November 2000.

Road Tax

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the additional revenue that will be raised in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01, (d) 2001–02 and (e) 2002–03 from excluding cars built after 1 January 1973 from the exemption of historic vehicles from road tax. [38717]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The additional revenue is expected to be some £3 million in each of the financial years from 1998–1999. However, the rate of scrapping of vehicles over twenty-five years old is significant and this will largely offset annual growth in the additional revenue.

Building Control Services

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the health and safety standards achieved by private contractors providing building control services. [38742]

Mr. Raynsford: Private contractors providing building control services are required to comply with the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. It places duties on employers to ensure the health and safety of their employees. It also places duties on employers and the self-employed to other persons who might be affected by their work activities. Health and safety legislation is enforced by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and local authorities.

Building control provision is governed by the Building Act 1984 and Regulations made under that Act. Private contractors are required by Regulation 10 of the Building (Approved Inspectors etc.) Regulations 1985 to take such steps as are necessary, within the limits of professional skill and care, to ensure that the Building Regulations 1991 are complied with. These Regulations are primarily concerned with protecting the health and safety of those in and around buildings.

As with local authority building control, the Department currently conducts no formal monitoring of private contractors providing building control services.

Lead Paint

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to publicise the dangers of lead in surfaces in houses painted before 1960 to (a) pregnant women, (b) carers of young children and (c) the general public; and when they will be implemented. [39310]

Angela Eagle: We will shortly be publishing a revised leaflet on lead in paint which is intended to raise awareness of the associated dangers. The leaflet will provide accurate, readily assimilated information on the problems associated with old leaded paint and how to take effective safety measures. The intended audience will be the general public and the leaflet will be made widely available, but we will be discussing with the Department of Health appropriate means of bringing the leaflet to the attention of environmental health and health professionals, as well as providing more detailed information for these groups.

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the representations he has received on the dangers of lead in painted surfaces; and place a copy of the representations in the Library. [39308]

Angela Eagle: In the six months from October 1997, the Department has received seventeen individual representations from Members of Parliament on lead in paint, of which eight were forwarded from other Government Departments. In the same period, the Department received ten private inquiries from members of the public on the same topic.

It would be inappropriate to list these representations or place copies in the Library.

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which organisations he has consulted about publicising and providing information for the public on the risks of lead in old paintwork; and when the consultation will be completed. [39311]

Angela Eagle: The Department's own scientific and communications experts have liaised with other Government Departments, industry representatives and technical and design consultants in the provision of information to the public on the risks associated with lead in old paintwork.

The Department will continue to consult widely on risks from lead in all media, as part of the strategic overview of chemicals in the environment which it is conducting within the wider framework of the sustainable use of chemicals, as announced by the Deputy Prime Minister.

Coastguard Agency

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many responses were received to the HM Coastguard five-year strategy consultation document; [38668]

(2) how many of the responses to the HM Coastguard five-year strategy consultation document expressed opposition to the possible closure of one or more coastguard stations. [38669]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A total of 1,600 copies of the HM Coastguard five-year strategy consultation document were issued. 215 responses were received. Response to the consultation on the Strategy is currently with Ministers for consideration. It would, therefore be inappropriate to release details until Ministers' deliberations are complete. A copy of the relevant document will be placed in the House Library as soon as the way forward is decided.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1998, Official Report column 444, if he will place in the Library a list of the unclassified papers in the Technical Memoranda series produced by the Chemical Technology Division of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, indicating the title of each paper and the date on which each paper was produced. [38962]

Mr. Spellar: I am today placing a list in the Library of the House.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Quality Management Group at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston was set up; what is the purpose of this group; how many series of technical papers or reports are currently being produced by this group; and what are the names of each series. [38992]

Mr. Spellar: A quality management group, originally called the Superintendency of Inspection, has existed at the Atomic Weapons Establishment AWE since the 1960s. It is currently part of the Directorate of Quality and Safety Assurance whose function includes the stewardship of the AWE quality system. The Directorate of Quality Assurance maintains the AWE Quality Manual, and supporting documentation. It also produces quality plans, audit programmes, audit reports and quarterly analysis reports.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1998, Official Report columns 443–44, how many reports in the untitled series of papers produced by the Warhead Engineering Division of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston are currently unclassified. [38963]

Mr. Spellar: There are some 140 unclassified reports in the untitled series.

Chemical Defence Establishment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which scientific journals and other open publications staff from the defence microbiology division of the Chemical Defence Establishment (Porton Down) have published papers in 1995 and 1996; and if he will specify the titles of the papers and the date on which the papers appeared. [38605]

Mr. Spellar: During 1995 and 1996, staff from the microbiology section of the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Porton Down have published a number of papers in scientific journals and other open literature publications, the details of which are set out.

Singapore Air Show

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) Ministers and (b) civil servants who attended the Asian Aerospace 98 air show in Singapore, giving the costs of their attendance along with any other costs incurred by his Department in connection with the air show. [39246]

Mr. Spellar: I attended Asian Aerospace 98 as a guest of the Singaporean Government, who paid all costs associated with my attendance. A further thirty one MOD personnel have been identified as attending. The cost incurred by the Ministry of Defence was some £217,500. This includes costs associated with travel, accommodation, construction of a small stand, general participation and a Royal Navy Lynx participating in the flying display.

It should be noted that overseas orders, which result from the activities of the Defence Export Services Organisation, DESO, including UK participation at such exhibitions, help to reduce the unit cost of equipment procured for the British Armed Forces—conservatively estimated at some £350 million saving per annum. DESO also helps to secure Commercial Exploitation Levies, forecast to be £56 million during the next financial year. The total benefits generated by DESO for the MOD therefore more than cover the total cost of all its operations.

Challenger II

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the export orders obtained for the Challenger II tank to date, indicating the value of (i) each order, (ii) offset commitments entered into as part of each order and (iii) export credits extended to support these orders. [39271]

Mr. Spellar: The value of contracts is a matter for Vickers Defence Systems and its customers. Vickers Defence Systems has, however, publicly stated that it has concluded two export contracts with the Royal Army of Oman for Challenger II in a number of variants; Main Battle Tank, Driver Training Tank and Repair and Recovery Vehicles. The contracts, which included logistics support packages, were valued at £130 million and £100 million.

While there is no contractual commitment to offset, Vickers contributes to the Omani-British Offset Programme.

Export credit guarantees amounting to some 80 per cent. of the value of each contract have been extended or are under consideration by ECGD.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support his Department has provided to Vickers in marketing the Challenger II abroad. [39270]

Mr. Spellar: As part of its normal activities, MOD's Defence Export Services Organisation has supported the sale of Challenger 2 in co-ordination with Vickers. The support has included appropriate provision of advice on the Government's foreign, defence and export control policies, facilitation of, and participation in, discussions with the Omani authorities, including visits and the provision of military, marketing and diplomatic advice.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) What estimate his Department has made of the relative economic benefits of purchasing (a) Challenger II and (b) the alternative proposed by each of the overseas contenders for the contract taking into account their offset proposals; [39253]

(2) if he will list the final offset proposals indicating the value of offsets proposed (i) in absolute terms and (ii) as a percentage of the contract made by the overseas suppliers who tendered for the contract to replace the Chieftain tank. [39252]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Export Agreements

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been undertaken by his Department on the cost and benefits of offset obligations incurred by UK defence companies as part of export defence agreements. [39251]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence holds no comprehensive record of offset agreements entered into by UK defence companies. While general support and advice is provided, no studies on the cost and benefits of offset obligations incurred by UK defence companies have been undertaken by the MOD.

Saudi Arabia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the offset obligations incurred under the Al Yamamah (a) I and (b) II agreement with Saudi Arabia, (i) as a percentage of the sales agreed and (ii) in absolute terms. [39248]

Mr. Spellar: The UK Government, in conjunction with British Aerospace, the Al Yamamah Prime Contractor, agreed to establish and develop a non-contractual Economic Offset Programme to promote commercial ventures between British and Saudi investors. The present target for the non-Saudi investment in ventures taken forward under the Al Yamamah Economic Offset Programme is to generate value of at least £1 billion.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the value of the offset obligations which have been met to date under the Al Yamamah (a) I and (b) II agreement, the individual offset projects agreed and the value of the offsets credited to each project. [39249]

Mr. Spellar: The projects which have been implemented to date under Al Yamamah Offset Programme, and the UK technology partner involved are as follows:

Glaxo Pharmaceutical Factory

Tate & Lyle Sugar Refinery

BP/UOP Cyclar Aromatics Chemical Plants

BAe Training Company

Harco Dispersion Products

Flover Instrument Repair Company.

Offset credits have not yet been negotiated with the Saudi authorities, but the UK estimate of the anticipated total value of the above projects is in the region of £450 million. Work continues to develop and promote further viable projects.

Offset Programme

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what offset targets are included in the Omani-British Offset Programme. [39250]

Mr. Spellar: A Memorandum of Understanding, MOU, was signed in 1990 between the Government of Oman and HMG on co-operation in the field of defence equipment and related services. Under the MOU, both parties agreed to work to encourage and identify viable opportunities for Offset for designated defence contracts. Offset in this context covers any form of new industrial or economic activity introduced for the benefit of Oman through the direct or indirect involvement of designated UK contractors.

A Joint Oman/Uk Offset Steering Group, JOSG, oversees the programme. It has identified 'priority areas' for investment, procedures, and pro-active roles to be taken by both the British and Omani Offset Secretariats. All proposed projects are considered by the JOSG and, if agreed, registered under the Offset Programme. Specific details of the projects registered are confidential between the Governments of the UK and Oman under Exemptions 1 and 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football-related Arrests

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the total number of football-related arrests in each of the past five football seasons, broken down according to (a) Premier League, (b) League Division One, (c) League Division Two and (d) League Division Three football matches; [39009]

(2) if he will list the total number of people arrested in connection with a football match who were subsequently convicted of a violent crime in each of the last five football seasons. [39010]

Mr. Michael: The following figures, provided by the Football Intelligence Unit of the National Criminal Intelligence Service, summarise the statistics on numbers of arrests for football-related offences and attendances at Premier and League matches for each of the relevant seasons.

	Arrests	Attendance (millions)

These figures do not include cup competitions and play-off matches. Records are not kept centrally of how many of those arrested were subsequently convicted of specific offences.

Witness Support Schemes

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance his Department gives to witness support schemes at court centres. [37654]

Mr. Michael: The latest available information is for 1996–97. In that year, some £1.6 million of the total Home Office grant of £11.7 million to Victim Support was used by them to run a witness support service at every Crown Court centre in England and Wales. There are 86 such services, including satellite courts. In 1996–97, the grant enabled 92 paid staff and 1,100 volunteers to provide help to 97,618 people.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from interested parties and individuals about the need to establish a Royal Commission on the use of animals for experimental purposes. [38630]

Mr. George Howarth: We have received a large number of cyclo-styled letters from supporters of Naturewatch. A petition was also handed in at Downing Street by representatives of this organisation. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State has written to Naturewatch and will meet the organisation's Director shortly.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a Royal Commission on the use of animals for experimental purposes. [38631]

Mr. George Howarth: We have not yet decided whether a Royal Commission is necessary.

The Animal Procedures Committee is carrying out a review of all aspects of the operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. We will be in a better position to decide on the need for and the remit of any Royal Commission once this review has been completed.

A Royal Commission would be extremely expensive, both in terms of money and human resources, and we estimate could take over two years to complete. We would rather use the resources that are currently available to make immediate improvements to the operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986—for example by implementing the 13 recommendations made in the Animal Procedures Committee's interim report on the review of the Act and the policies I announced on 6 November.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current licensing arrangements to protect animals used in scientific experiments; [38632]

(2) if he will review the present provisions governing authorisation of experiments on animals for scientific research; and if he will make a statement. [38633]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animal Procedures Committee is reviewing the operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. One of the specific areas it is looking at is the arrangements for personal and project licences and, in particular, the application of the cost/benefit assessment required by section 5(4) of the Act and the accessibility of information on alternatives to animal experiments.

The licensing arrangements under the 1986 Act are most rigorous in requiring certificates of designation, personal licences and project licences.

Certificates of designation ensure that establishments where animals are used in scientific procedures (or bred or supplied for such use) have high standards of care and accommodation and suitable veterinary and animal welfare personnel.

The project and personal licences ensure that those carrying out regulated procedures are qualified and suitable; that alternatives to animals are used wherever possible; and that any suffering or other harmful effects experienced by the animals have been weighed against the potential benefits (to humans or animals). Project licences also contain detailed arrangements for the control and minimisation of any pain or suffering, and ensure that the number of animals used is minimised.

Prison Officers' Association

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to address the informal industrial action by the Prison Officers' Association. [38933]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 April 1998]: We have made clear on a number of occasions that there can be no place for disruptive industrial action in our prisons. In order to help create a positive industrial relations framework, my right hon. Friend and I have instructed the Prison Service to draw up plans for new pay determination and dispute resolution procedures.

In the handful of establishments where the local branch of the Prison Officers' Association has held an unofficial meeting during work time, pay has been stopped for the period of the meeting.

TREASURY

Italian Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the methodology of the calculation by the Italian Government of gross domestic product as published by the International Monetary Fund. [38215]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 April 1998]: All EU Member States make available gross domestic product figures compiled according to the System of National Accounts (1968 of the United Nations) and published by the IMF in "International Financial Statistics".

Mersey Docks and Harbour Company

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much ABN Amro Rothschild was paid for handling the sale of the Government's stake in the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company. [38554]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 20 April 1998]: ABN AMRO Rothschild (AAR) acted as financial adviser and bookrunner to the Treasury for the sale in March 1998 of its remaining 12.4 million shares in the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company. The total fee due to AAR for these services is £175,734, representing 0.25 per cent. of the gross proceeds of £70,126,647.

Median Ages

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the median age of the population at five-yearly intervals from 1971 to 2031. [38722]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 21 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to answer your parliamentary question about the median age of the population at five-yearly intervals from 1971 to 2031. The data you requested are as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to ensure that the freedom of the Post Office to enter into domestic joint ventures does not give rise to unfair competition with other service providers. [38988]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The Post Office is subject to national and European competition rules. In addition, the guidelines for Post Office domestic joint ventures, set by the Government annexed to the response to the Trade and Industry Select Committee and published by the Committee as its fifth special report, are intended to safeguard against the possibility of unfair competition. The guidelines require, inter alia, that any proposed venture should satisfy normal commercial criteria, that its prices should at least fully meet long-term marginal costs (including a full contribution to overheads), that it should treat the element of the price which represents the charge for access to the monopoly infrastructure in a transparent way, and comply with state aids rules.

Fireworks

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will enter into discussions with the Home Office on the provision of a scheme for retailers to hand in fireworks which have become illegal to sell, to be operated by the fire brigades. [38721]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Although the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997 prohibit the supply of certain fireworks to the general public, they may continue to be supplied to persons who are exempt from the prohibition. As far as we are aware, industry efforts to date have been to attempt to find alternative legal markets for the prohibited fireworks. If there are signs that a significant number of retailers want to explore a system of simply disposing of the fireworks, we would be prepared to look at this possibility with the fire service authorities and anyone else who may be in a position to offer practical assistance.

Employment Rights Act

Mr. Wills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Treasury ex-gratia payments in relation to claims under the provisions of the Employment Rights Act 1996 have been made. [38927]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Since the Employment Rights Act became effective on 22 August 1996, eighteen ex gratia payments have been made.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list for each nuclear power station in the United Kingdom her estimate of (a) the current life expectancy and (b) the costs of decommissioning. [32063]

Mr. Battle: Decommissioning of a nuclear power station is a matter for the operator, taking into account the requirements of the regulatory authorities. This includes details of timing and finance.

Inward Investment

Mr. Love: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the total amount of inward investment by region in the United Kingdom for each of the past 10 years. [38380]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The available data are shown in the table. These are based on administrative information provided to the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) by companies. There is no requirement to notify the Department of investment decisions, therefore the data are probably underestimates of actual investment.

Although investment will usually be spread over a number of years, the total amount of the investment is recorded only in the year the announcement to invest was made.

The regions shown are Regional Development Organisations (RDOs).

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Broadcasting

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Director General of the BBC concerning the Corporation's proposals to fund the converting of BBC Services into digital form by BSkyB. [39056]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no such discussions with the BBC. However, the Government support the BBC's stated aim of making its licence fee funded digital television services available on all digital delivery platforms, including digital satellite.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Director General of the BBC concerning the corporation's commercial relationships with private companies. [39057]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's discussions with the Director General and others at the BBC frequently touch on the Corporation's commercial relationships. It is, however, primarily for the BBC Governors to ensure that such relationships are conducted on a basis which maximises the return to the licence fee payer while respecting fair trading and competition rules and promoting the overall interest of the BBC as a public service broadcaster.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what policies his Department has to stimulate the development of public service digital terrestrial broadcasting. [39011]

Mr. Fisher: The offers of guaranteed places on digital terrestrial television multiplexes, which have been accepted by all the existing terrestrial television broadcasters, will safeguard public service broadcasting and will enable those broadcasters to increase greatly the amount of programming they can deliver. The BBC, ITV, Channel 4 and S4C have all stated their intention to offer new services, some of which will be free to air.

Kick Boxing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support, indicating separately financial assistance for (a) travel, (b) equipment and (c) training, is given to individuals who represent England and Wales in kickboxing; what plans there are to increase such support, with particular reference to the National Lottery; and if he will make a statement. [38415]

Mr. Banks: The United Kingdom and Home Country Sports Councils, through whom Government support for sport is primarily channelled, do not provide financial support to kickboxing, and have no current plans to do so.

As independent bodies, established by Royal Charter, it is for the Sports Councils to decide which activities and organisations should be eligible for support, including funding from the National Lottery

Canal Restoration

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the National Heritage Lottery Fund on changes to the eligibility of canal restoration projects for funding; and if he will make a statement. [38591]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no such discussions. The criteria for Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) awards are determined by the Trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund, the body responsible for the HLF, in accordance with their statutory powers and the policy directions issued by the Secretary of State. The HLF plans to issue revised guidance on canal projects later this year, which will take account of the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council's review of Inland waterway restoration priorities.

Tourism

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps are taken by (a) the Millennium Commission and (b) the Heritage Lottery Fund to obtain the opinion of local people in areas where applications are made for grants to support major tourism projects. [38564]

Mr. Chris Smith: So far as the Millennium Commission is concerned, I will write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House. The Heritage Lottery Fund takes into account evidence of community support and involvement in a project, including details of public consultation, in considering applications for funding.

Millennium Declaration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the outcome of discussions concerning the proposed international Millennium Greenwich Declaration. [38299]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department, the Millennium Commission and the New Millennium Experience Company have not received a formal proposal for an international Greenwich Millennium Declaration. However, were such a proposal to be forthcoming, it would be considered on its merits.

Women's Boxing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from women's boxing groups; and if he will make a statement. [37916]

Mr. Banks: Since May 1997, this Department has received one representation from the Women's Boxing Commission at the Amateur Boxing Association.

I appreciate the interest this issue creates, but I should explain that the Government do not control women's boxing—or indeed any other sport in this country. We are, of course, keen to see that the proper medical safeguards and regulations are in place for all sports, especially those which may carry a higher level of physical contact, and believe that the sport's governing bodies are well equipped to keep these in place.

IT Contracts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those companies awarded contracts by his Department for the supply of computer hardware and software in each year since 1992 indicating the value of each contract. [37976]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department of Culture, Media and Sport has outsourced the provision of IT support and services to Sema Group who are responsible for the bulk of computer hardware and software procurement. Through Sema, the Department spent £385,000 on software and £189,000 on hardware in 1997–1998, £223,000 on software and £540,000 on hardware in 1996–1997, and £213,000 on software and £145,000 on hardware in 1995–1996. Figures for previous years are not available.

The only contract for software and hardware let by the Department in this period was with CSL, the software cost was £88,000 and the hardware cost was £39,000.

Tourist Information Centres

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourist information centres are currently operating in the United Kingdom; how many operate (a) all year round and (b) seasonally; and what plans there are to open new tourist information centres. [37981]

Mr. Tom Clarke: There are 792 tourist information centres currently operating in the United Kingdom of which 564 open all year round and 228 are open seasonally. We are not aware of any plans at present to open new tourist information centres.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Service

31. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what efficiency savings he expects the Court Service to achieve in the years (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01. [37645]

Mr. Hoon: The Court Service is planning initiatives to save £4.25 million in 1998–99; £9.95 million in 1999–2000; and £12.05 million in 2000–01. The savings will come from computerisation of administrative tasks in both the Crown and county courts, improved energy efficiency and the better use of resources.

Legal Expenses Insurance System

36. Mr. Cranston: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of a legal expenses insurance system; and if he will make a statement. [37652]

Mr. Hoon: The Government are keen to encourage the widespread use by individuals of legal expenses insurance, which provides a means for people to pay for legal actions. In the recently published consultation paper Access to Justice with Conditional Fees we invited suggestions as to whether changes to the law, practice and procedure might be needed to encourage the expansion of legal expenses insurance.

Family Law

39. Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent representations he has received on proposals for the reform of family law. [37656]

Mr. Hoon: I have received a number of representations on a variety of issues concerning the reform of family law.

Security Services (Records)

40. Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the availability of public records relating to the security services. [37657]

Mr. Hoon: In 1992, the then Lord Chancellor, following consultation with the Ministers concerned, renewed the approval to retain the records of the security and intelligence agencies and the retention of related departmental records until the end of 2011.

This approval to retain the records is not mandatory, it is permissive. All the agencies have programmes in place to review related records held by other government departments and these are released to the Public Record Office wherever possible. In addition, the Security Service and GCHQ are reviewing their own older records and releasing them to the PRO whenever such release is possible without compromising operational effectiveness. In the case of the Secret Intelligence Service, I refer the hon. Member to the answer he received from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 324.

Legal Aid

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent discussions he has had with trades unions regarding legal aid. [37653]

Mr. Hoon: I met representatives of the trades unions and the TUC on 9 December last year, and 27 January and 24 February this year to discuss a number of matters including our proposals for legal aid reform. As I told my hon. Friend in an oral answer on 4 March 1998, Official Report, column 1067, we discussed with the trades unions their excellent schemes, which provide legal advice and representation to trade union members. We also discussed the possibility of opening up these arrangements to a wider category of people.

Access to Justice

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to improve access to justice for those with learning difficulties. [37655]

Mr. Hoon: I am committed to improving access to justice for everyone. Those with learning difficulties will benefit from a number of existing initiatives. Magistrates' Courts Committees have recently been issued with a Good Practice Guide for Disabled Court Users, which sets specific performance standards for the courts. Each Crown and county court has appointed a Customer Service Officer whose role includes helping those with special needs. In the civil courts, there are provisions for the appointment of a next friend or guardian ad litem for those who are under a disability. Members of the judiciary, including the magistracy, are trained in equal opportunity matters, including those relating to disability. In addition, the report of the Interdepartmental Review of Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses has recently been completed and is being actively considered by Home Office Ministers.

Weymouth Land Registry

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff are currently working in the Weymouth Land Registry; and if he will make a statement on trends in their work load. [37648]

Mr. Hoon: At 1 April 1998, there were 429 people working at the Weymouth District Land Registry. The volume of work at Weymouth is continuing to increase reflecting increased activity in the property market. The 1997–98 financial year showed an increase of 4½ per cent. over the previous year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charter Mark

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what plans he has to extend the Charter Mark Awards Scheme to those organisations not currently eligible for consideration under the scheme; [38744]

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what criteria organisations have to meet to be considered for inclusion in the Charter Mark Awards Scheme. [38743]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The scheme is currently open to all public sector services that provide a service directly to members of the public. We have extended the scheme to cover other areas that receive a significant element of public funding, such as careers services, training and enterprise councils and registered housing associations.

Each year, we carry out a review of the current eligibility criteria for Charter Marks and I have recently considered whether eligibility should be extended to voluntary organisations and charities (and indeed private sector organisations). As a result, the 1998 scheme was extended to include independent schools, hospitals and hospices which are registered charities and receive at least 75 per cent. public funding. I have decided that, for the time being, our priority must be for the resources of the scheme to be focused on improving the quality of public sector organisations. However, I will continue to evaluate the comments of interested organisations as the scheme continues to develop and expand.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Vitamin B6

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his draft Statutory Instrument on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplement has been passed for comment to (a) the European Commission and (b) other member states of the European Union. [38887]

Mr. Rooker: A copy of the draft regulations required to implement the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6 was sent to the European Commission on 3 April. It is the responsibility of the Commission to inform other member states of the European Union of the notification.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the United States Government concerning freedom of trade as regards his proposed restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements. [38883]

Mr. Rooker: Officials in the Department of Trade and Industry have received one letter from the Office of the United States Trade Representative which, among other things, notes that the Government's proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6 would have implications for US trade in this product. The Government have also received a representation on this subject from two United States senators.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with (a) the American National Academy of Science and (b) representatives of the United States Government about the Academy's current investigation into the safety of vitamin B6. [38886]

Mr. Rooker: I am aware that the United States National Academy of Sciences (NAS) has been undertaking a review of dietary reference intakes for B vitamins, including vitamin B6, but I have not had any discussions on this matter with either the NAS or with representatives of the United States Government. However, officials in the Department of Trade and Industry have confirmed in correspondence with the Office of the United States Trade Representative in Washington that if further data on the safety of vitamin B6 were to become available during the current consultation exercise on the draft regulations required to implement the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6, it will be taken into account by the Government.

Badgers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current cost of (a) research into the cause of bovine TB related to badgers and (b) the experimental culling programme for badgers. [38882]

Mr. Rooker: The estimated cost of the MAFF TB research programme in the financial year 1997–98 was more than £1.7 million. Of this, about £1.2 million was concerned with understanding the relationship between TB in badgers and TB in cattle, and developing control methods to prevent transmission of TB to cattle. The research programme for 1998–99 is currently being finalised. I am not able to estimate the cost of the culling experiment until we have received the advice of the Expert Group looking at the design of the experiment, and decided how to proceed.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many responses he received to the consultation on the White Paper, "A Food Standards Agency: a Force for Change"; and of those how many were (i) broadly in favour of the proposals, (ii) broadly opposed to the proposals, (iii) in favour of including nutrition within the Agency's remit and (iv) in favour of the proposed funding arrangements. [39013]

Mr. Rooker: As of 17 April, 1,011 responses have been received. We are analysing these in detail and will make a statement in the near future.

All but a handful broadly welcomed our proposals, but crude analysis of numbers does not do justice to either the complexity of the issues or the subtlety of respondents' arguments.

Many major interest groups including consumer, public health, local authority, medical and other academic bodies favour including nutrition within the remit of the Agency, but others, including representatives of the food industry, remain opposed to the Agency having responsibility for nutrition.

A wide range of respondents, including production, manufacturing, retail and consumer groups, opposed funding the Agency through charges on industry, arguing that food safety and standards activity should be funded by the taxpayer. Many respondents raised points on the organisation and administration on the proposed licensing/registration scheme. The Government have undertaken to consult again on the options for the scheme before proposals are finalised.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure that the composition of the Food Standards Agency reflects all sectors of the food industry. [39016]

Mr. Rooker: Our proposals on the composition of the Agency's Commission are set out in the White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" (Cm3830) which was published for consultation on 14 January.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that the remit of the Foods Standards Agency is limited to matters of food safety and does not include general public health issues. [39017]

Mr. Rooker: Our proposals on the remit of the Food Standards Agency were set out in the White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" (Cm3830) which was published for consultation on 14 January. The Bill establishing the Agency will specify the scope of its remit on food standards and safety.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements will be made within the Food Standards Agency to ensure the protection of commercially confidential material. [39015]

Mr. Rooker: Within the parameters which will be set out in the Bill to establish the Agency, and subject to the requirements of the forthcoming freedom of information legislation, the Agency will be expected to establish and make public its own procedures for protecting legitimate commercial confidentiality. However, as our White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" (Cm3830) explains, it will publish information where there is a clear need for this to be in the public domain.

Home Grown Cereals Authority

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of the Home Grown Cereals Authority to be completed. [38803]

Mr. Rooker: Ministers expect to receive the recommendations of this review shortly.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme to be completed. [38799]

Mr. Rooker: The review of the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme is being taken forward as part of this Department's Comprehensive Spending Review.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the extent by which the Central Science Laboratory failed in 1996–97 to achieve its formal financial target of complying with PES budgetary controls and the supply estimates; and if he will set out the reasons for this failure. [37963]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 6 April 1998]: The cash financial position for the Central Science Laboratory changed considerably during the year compared to the original plan. The extended and phased move to the York site, combined with the implications of the closure of the other sites, created a £467,000 shortfall compared to the PES target.

Scottish Fisheries

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on how the Working Time Directive will affect the Scottish fishing industry; and when industry representatives will receive full details on these matters; [39233]

(2) if he will make a statement on how the Working Time Directive will affect each category of shore fishermen. [39234]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

The sea fishing industry is currently excluded from the provisions of the Working Time Directive. The Commission has recently published its second consultation document on the excluded sectors. We shall be examining the Commission's proposals on their merits and in the light of the current arrangements and specific needs of each sector.

WALES

Education Units (Hospitals)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many education units for children have been established in Welsh hospitals. [38449]

Mr. Hain: There are no hospital schools in Wales. Local education authorities have a responsibility under section 19 of the Education Act 1996 to provide suitable education for children of compulsory school age who are not in school. Where a hospital school is not involved, the arrangements which they make for children in hospital are a matter for them and for the health authority concerned. Information on this provision is not available centrally.

Young Athletes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure the provision of facilities for young athletes in the north of Wales. [38437]

Mr. Hain: Through SPORTLOT—the Lottery Sports Fund for Wales—we are seeing a substantial growth in facilities to serve the local, regional and national needs of sport. Since it began operating in 1995, SPORTLOT has made 76 awards totalling £11.7 million towards the provision of new or improved sports facilities throughout North Wales. This includes an award of over £0.5 million to help with the construction of an all-weather athletics track and stadium at Deeside College.

Island Green Redevelopment

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money from grants for which he is responsible has been paid to date to developers working on the Island Green and Wrexham Central Station site. [38534]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Development Agency (WDA), acting as the Secretary of State's agent, is now responsible for the Urban Investment Grant (UIG) scheme. The Island Green redevelopment, of which the Wrexham Central Railway Station area is part, is the subject of a legal agreement for the provision of an UIG of £3.5 million. Payment of UIG is in arrears of expenditure on site and is proportionate to progress of the works. Whilst details of the payments made to developers are commercially confidential, the WDA has confirmed that, in this case, the first claim for payment of UIG has not yet been received.

Birth Control

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost to the NHS of (a) providing the contraceptive pill free, (b) providing abortions and (c) births in the last year for which figures are available. [37835]

Mr. Win Griffiths: (a) The total estimated cost of free contraceptive pills in 1997 to the NHS in Wales was £2.55 million.

(b) In 1996, there were 6,178 abortions to women in Wales paid for by the NHS.

(c) There were 35,066 births to Welsh residents in 1996.

Information on the costs of abortions (b) and (c) is not collected centrally. However, information is collected by medical and surgical specialty and the total expenditure by NHS Trusts on paediatrics, gynaecology, obstetrics, maternity general practice, community maternity services and community health education programmes in 1996–97 was £139.07 million.

Blood Donation Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of shortages of blood in the blood donation service in Wales on hospital waiting lists for operations in the last 12 months. [37672]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There has been only one occasion in the last 12 months, for a period of 48 hours, when a shortage of blood led to NHS Trusts in the Welsh Blood Service's area being advised to postpone elective surgery. It is difficult to assess accurately the impact on hospital waiting lists but it is likely to represent less than 1 per cent. of the NHS Wales activity and I expect NHS Trusts to rectify this as soon as possible. There have been no similar occurrences in North Wales.

National School Standards Task Force

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the National School Standards Task Force to report. [38800]

Mr. Hain: The Standards Task Force was established by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to advise him on education matters in England. Its terms of reference do not require it to report. In Wales, the Secretary of State consults widely on all measures proposed under his BEST programme to raise education standards.

New Deal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the differences in priorities in respect of the implementation of the New Deal in Wales relative to other parts of the United Kingdom. [38732]

Mr. Hain: In Wales, we have our own New Deal Advisory Task Force, comprising representatives of private and public sector employers, the voluntary and environmental sectors and training and education providers. Since its establishment last summer, the Wales Task Force has actively pursued its remit of ensuring that the New Deal is tailored to meet the needs of Wales.

The Employment Service Strategic Plan for Wales highlights a range of issues that need to be considered in the delivery of the New Deal in Wales. Copies of this document have been placed in the Library of the House.

Postmarks

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the importance to local communities of a bilingual postmark. [37881]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

Decisions relating to postmarks are the operational responsibility of Post Office management. I understand from Royal Mail that it is their policy to use bilingual postmarks for mail originating in Wales wherever possible. I also understand that mail from North Wales to be processed at the planned new mail centre in Chester will have a bilingual postmark.

HEALTH

3M Capital Hip System

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals which used the 3M Capital Hip system. [31979]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the co-operation he has received from the suppliers of the 3M Capital Hip system. [31981]

Mr. Boateng: We welcome the clear statement that 3M Health Care has made about their responsibilities and particularly their commitment to provide funding for the assessment, treatment and long term follow-up of patients who were given the capital hip implant. The company is cooperating closely with the Department and the Medical Devices Agency to establish the reasons for the early failure of this implant to see whether there are wider lessons to be learned.

Lead Paint

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken by his Department to alert (a) GPs and (b) other health professionals to symptoms of lead poisoning and the risks associated with contact with lead in older paintwork in houses for (i) children and (ii) adults engaged in DIY. [39309]

Mr. Milburn: An item on lead poisoning from paint and other sources will be included in the issue of "CMO's Update" to be published on 5 May. "CMO's Update" is a communication from the Chief Medical Officer to all doctors in England. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Cleft Lips and Palates

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to improve the coordination of surgeons, speech therapists and psychologists in the delivery of cleft lip and palate services; [31984]

(2) what plans he has to extend local access to cleft lip and palate services; [31985]

(3) what plans he has to improve the delivery of cleft lip and palate services in the United Kingdom. [31983]

Mr. Boateng: The Clinical Services Advisory Committee's report on cleft lip and/or palate, and the Government's response, were published on 23 February. Copies are available in the Library. We are committed to implementing the Committee's recommendations relating to raising quality standards and improving clinical outcomes by concentrating cleft lip and palate services in a fewer number of centres in the United Kingdom. We will establish an implementation group to progress this work, taking account of access, delivery and the coordination of services.

Heart Attacks

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list figures for the survival rates of (a) men and (b) women after their first heart attack. [37869]

Mr. Milburn: Figures in the form requested are not available centrally. Figures held by the Office for National Statistics show that in 1996, 37,717 men and 30,639 women in England and Wales died from heart attacks, making a total of 68,356.

Butane Gas Misuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths have occurred by age and region in each of the last 10 years due to the volatile substance misuse of butane gas products. [38146]

Mr. Milburn: The available figures are set out in the table. Tables for deaths cannot be broken down on a more detailed basis without rendering individual cases identifiable.

Tamoxifen

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the indicators so far from the tests of the Tamoxifen drug in Britain. [38945]

Mr. Boateng: The International Breast Cancer Intervention Study is co-ordinated by the United Kingdom Co-ordinating Committee on Cancer Research (UKCCCR) with Dr. Trevor Powles as the principal investigator in the UK. The study is investigating the use of Tamoxifen for the prevention of breast cancer in otherwise healthy women who are at increased risk of breast cancer because of a family history. The UKCCCR established a data and safety monitoring committee for the study which has met at six-monthly intervals in the light of recently announced findings from a similar study in the United States of America and Canada. It will shortly be issuing a report.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS element of health expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product for the years 1968–69 to 1998–99. [38723]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is set out in the table.

United Kingdom National Health Service expenditure as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product

Year	UK NHS gross expenditure as a percentage of GDP[1]
1968	3.9
1969	3.8
1970	3.9

Health Care Priorities

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the setting up of a national council on health care priorities; and if he will make a statement. [38716]

Mr. Milburn: A range of suggestions to improve priority setting in the National Health Service has been made, including setting up a national council on health care priorities. We have set out our plans for the NHS in The New NHS White Paper. It sets out measures to improve national consistency while allowing local flexibility to ensure services are responsive to local needs and wishes. We do not see a place for a national council within these arrangements.

Hospital Consultants

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the merit award system for hospital consultants. [38754]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for West Lancashire (Mr. Pickthall) on 7 April 1998, Official Report, column 197.

Specialties

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) ECG technicians, (b) orthotists, (c) prosthetists, (d) neuro-physiologists, (e) audiologists, (f) clinical biochemists, (g) clinical psychologists, (h) pharmacists and (i) physiotherapists are employed by the NHS in each grade; and for each grade how many of these are women. [39029]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not available in precisely the format requested, as the Department's non-medical workforce census no longer collects information about grade, and does not separately identify all of the staff groups requested. The table gives the information that is available.

National Health Service hospital and community health services scientific, therapeutic and technical staff by sex working in specific areas of work in England as at 30 September 1996.

Medicines Review

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work and proposed reporting arrangements of the review of prescribing, supply and administration of medicines. [39227]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 20 April 1998]: We plan to publish shortly the review team's first report on the supply and administration of medicines under group protocols. The second and final report of the review will be published after the review has been completed, which is expected to be during the summer.

Discharge Plans

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to require hospital trusts to involve carers and patients in the production and signing-off of discharge plans; [39054]

(2) if he will make it his policy to require hospital trusts to provide patients and their carers with a copy of their discharge plan. [39051]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 20 April 1998]: General good practice guidance on hospital discharge procedures—"Hospital Discharge Workbook—a manual on hospital discharge procedures"—makes it clear that the patient, their family and carer, should be consulted and informed at all stages of their discharge, they should have their own copy of an agreed discharge plan, the discharge plan should contain no big surprises, and the discharge should happen according to the plan.

Health Service Guidance (95)8, "NHS Responsibilities for Meeting Continuing Health Care Needs" included, in its discharge section, a reminder about the workbook. The HSG added that patients and their families and carers should be kept fully informed about how procedures for hospital discharge and the multi-disciplinary assessment of patients continuing health care needs will work, and should receive relevant information (in writing and in other formats appropriate to their needs) they require to make decisions about continuing care.

Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the representations made by the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority in their report, "The River Runs Dry", concerning the impact of the current capitation formula on the allocation for 1998–99. [39049]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 20 April 1998]: We have noted the comments about the national weighted capitation formula in the consultation document "The River Runs Dry".

The weighted capitation formula has been updated since the document was published. For 1998/99 allocations, services for people with learning difficulties were weighted for additional need.

As part of their work programme, the Advisory Committee on Resource Allocation will consider the possible extra unavoidable costs associated with providing services for ethnic populations and the health needs of mentally disordered offenders.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the final full year figures for (a) Merton and Sutton and (b) Wandsworth district health authorities for (i) the amount by which they were above or below target, (ii) the level of recurring overspend against allocation and (iii) the comparable figures for the new Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority. [39053]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 20 April 1998]: Merton and Sutton District Health Authority and Wandsworth District Health Authority were merged on 1 April 1994. The final year that they existed as two separate authorities was therefore 1993/94. However the allocation for 1994/95 was calculated on the old basis and information on the allocation for both years is given in the tables.

1993/94	Allocation (£000)	Weighted capitation target (£000)	Distance from target (£000)	Distance from target (per cent.)
Merton and Sutton	122,724	119,610	3,114	2.6
Wandsworth	87,243	72,023	15,220	21.1
Total	209,967	191,633	18,334	9.6

1994/95	Allocation (£000)	Weighted Capitation Target (£000)	Distance from Target (£000)	Distance from Target (per cent.)
Merton and Sutton	122,065	120,060	2,005	1.7
Wandsworth	85,574	72,545	13,029	18.0
Total	207,638	192,604	15,034	7.8

Currently, the allocation and weighted capitation position for Merton Sutton & Wandsworth Health Authority is:

1998/99	Baseline Allocation (£000)	Weighted capitation target (£000)	Distance from target (£000)	Distance from target (per cent.)
Merton Sutton and Wandsworth	309,537	293,327	16,210	5.5

Information on recurrent expenditure was not recorded before 1997/98 so information on recurrent overspending of the two district health authorities at the time of the merger is not available.

The reported surplus/(deficit) in the accounts of the two authorities for 1993/94 (before adjusting for directly managed units and common services) were:

	£000
Merton and Sutton	(£51)
Wandsworth	£1,003

Watford and Mount Vernon NHS Trust

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the extra money promised for the NHS in the Budget will be given to the Watford and Mount Vernon NHS Trust to reduce waiting lists. [38864]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 21 April 1998]: Of the extra £417 million made available in the Budget to the National Health Service in England for 1998–99, £320 million will be targeted directly on cutting waiting lists. Ninety per cent. of this will be allocated to health authorities in line with their initial general allocations for this financial year against targets for reduced waiting lists by the end of March 1999. These targets will in turn be built into service agreements with NHS Trusts. The other ten per cent. will be used to reward good performance and to tackle poor performance. Further announcements on the remaining £97 million will be made in due course.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Parliament

10. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress on the design for the Scottish Parliament. [37623]

Mr. McLeish: The design team selection process is proceeding to schedule. From some 70 firms submitting bids, 12 have been chosen to take part in competitive interviews in May and, thereafter, 3 or 4 firms will be asked to prepare indicative design proposals for the Holyrood site which will go on public display. The design team will be appointed in July.

Education Expenditure

12. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate what expenditure on education in Scotland in 1998–99 will be as a proportion of Scottish gross domestic product. [37626]

Mr. Wilson: It is estimated that expenditure on education in Scotland this year will be approximately 6½ per cent. of Scottish gross domestic product.

Inward Investment

13. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to secure inward investment for rural areas. [37627]

Mr. Wilson: Locate in Scotland promotes the whole of Scotland as a location for inward investment.

Its approach is, first, to interest potential investors in Scotland and then to identify those locations which best meet their requirements. Where appropriate, Locate in Scotland ensures that potential investors are fully aware of rural locations which may be suited to their requirements.

16. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of inward investment in Scotland in 1997. [37630]

Mr. Wilson: Inward investment in Scotland has been running at record levels for the past few years and that success is continuing. Only last Friday, I was delighted to be able to announce another 800 new jobs at a call centre in Dundee. The detailed inward investment figures for 1997–98 will be published in the Locate in Scotland Annual Review in June.

"Working Together for a Healthier Scotland"

14. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in response to his consultation document, "Working Together for a Healthier Scotland". [37628]

Mr. Galbraith: Since the publication on 5 February 1998 of the Green Paper, "Working Together for a Healthier Scotland", 214 responses have been received to date.

Abortion

15. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 579, on abortion law, what response he has made to the six letters. [37629]

Mr. Galbraith: The six letters sought changes in the current abortion law. They received responses explaining that this Government, like their predecessors, do not adopt a collective position on the ethical issues of abortion and that proposals for changes in the abortion law have always been decided in Parliament on the basis of free votes.

Petrol and Diesel Prices

17. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the price of petrol and diesel in rural Scotland. [37631]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations regarding petrol and diesel prices in rural Scotland from companies, community and interest groups, and from members of the public.

Passenger Registration Directive

19. Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the EU Passenger Registration directive. [37633]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend has received no representations concerning the EU Passenger Registration Directive.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has consulted widely with industry about the proposed Directive. It has set up a working group of shipping representatives which includes the Chamber of Shipping and the British Ports Association, to consider how the Directive should be implemented. Full consultation with affected parties will take place once the Directive has been adopted.

Ferry Services

20. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contingency plans his Department has made against a major ferry breakdown in the Caledonian MacBrayne fleet. [37634]

Mr. McLeish: Decisions on the deployment of vessels in the event of a major vessel breakdown within the Caledonian MacBrayne network are operational matters for the company. I am well aware that the recent breakdown of the "Isle of Lewis" has made it necessary to redeploy vessels throughout the CalMac network and temporarily to suspend and re-schedule some services. I do regret the inconvenience which may be caused to the company's customers and I understand that Caledonian MacBrayne is doing all it can to minimise disruption of services. I hope that normal scheduled services can be resumed as soon as possible.

Decentralisation

21. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to decentralise Government departments and agencies throughout Scotland. [37635]

Mr. McLeish: Staff of The Scottish Office and its related Agencies already work from a number of locations around Scotland. Staffing dispositions are kept under review to ensure continued efficiency and value for money. There are no present plans to make significant changes to existing staff dispositions. Future arrangements would be a matter for the Scottish Executive and the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Economy

22. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chief executive of Scottish Enterprise to discuss trends in the Scottish economy. [37636]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend last met the Chief Executive of Scottish Enterprise on 9 January 1998 when he accompanied the Chairman to discuss Scottish Enterprise's strategy for economic development and related issues.

Trunk Roads Review

24. Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to conclude the strategic review of the trunk road network; and if he will make a statement. [37638]

Mr. McLeish: We intend to issue a consultation document on a revised appraisal framework for assessing future expenditure on the trunk road network shortly after the publication of the Scottish Integrated Transport White Paper. Investment decisions will be based on the criteria of integration, accessibility, economy, safety and environmental impact. The Review will be completed once responses to the consultation document have been considered in the autumn.

Council Housing

25. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Scottish local authorities on the future provision of council housing in Scotland. [37639]

Mr. Macdonald: I frequently meet Scottish local authorities to discuss matters related to council housing stock, and other housing issues.

Rural School Closures

26. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of rural school closures. [37640]

Mr. Wilson: I have invited authorities to apply a test of proportional advantage to any proposed closure of a rural school, demonstrating whether the educational and financial gains outweigh any negative effects on the community.

Employment

27. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish TUC to discuss the employment situation in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [37641]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has had frequent meetings with the Scottish TUC during which a great number of issues of importance to the Scottish economy have been discussed. He took the opportunity yesterday when he addressed the Annual Congress of the STUC to emphasise the importance of modernisation and partnership to help the Scottish economy become more internationally competitive.

Millennium Compliance

28. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the millennium compliance of his Department's information technology systems. [37642]

Mr. Dewar: I have received no representations on the millennium compliance of my Department's computer systems. My Department is taking appropriate steps to ensure that its information technology systems are thoroughly checked for millennium compliance, and that any necessary remedial action is completed in line with the timetable set out in the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 622. My Department contributes quarterly progress reports on millennium compliance; these are published on the Internet.

Child Care

23. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to assist lone parents seeking jobs or training to obtain child care. [37637]

Mr. Wilson: We are taking action in a number of important ways. Under the New Deal for Lone Parents, the Employment Service offers advice and assistance on childcare to lone parents seeking employment. Assistance with childcare is available on all four options under the New Deal for young people. We are committed to developing a national childcare strategy for Scotland which will increase the range of childcare options available to parents, including lone parents. Almost £30 million extra in public funding and from lottery funds will be available for childcare in Scotland over the next five years. The new childcare tax credit in the Working Families Tax Credit will be a big improvement in childcare help.

Carbon Emissions

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to reduce carbon emissions from (a) power generation and (b) road traffic in order to meet the targets agreed by the Government at Kyoto. [38562]

Mr. Macdonald: The UK share of the European Union's target of 8 per cent. arising from Kyoto will be agreed in discussion with Member States. This will place an obligation on the UK as a whole to cut a basket of 6 greenhouse gas emissions. The UK provisional target, reached in March 1997 and based on a 3-gas basket, stands at 10 per cent. We indicated before Kyoto that we were prepared to consider doing more than this but we would not do so simply to enable others to do less. We have a separate domestic aim of a 20 per cent. cut in CO_2 emissions.

The Government plan to issue a consultation paper in the summer. This will discuss policy options for meeting the UK's legally binding target. It will also discuss measures which would move beyond that towards our 20 per cent. CO_2 aim.

The contribution that might be made by the power generation and road transport sectors is being considered as part of the various wider reviews in these areas. I would not want to pre-judge the outcome of these reviews.

Pre-school Education

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that local education authorities undertake partnerships in respect of the provision of pre-school education in 1999 with providers in the private and voluntary sector. [38628]

Mr. Wilson: I announced on 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 383 the detailed arrangements for funding pre-school education in the 1998–99 school session. I again confirmed that local authorities carry the lead responsibility for planning, co-ordinating and delivering pre-school services in their area. I expect them to collaborate with providers in the voluntary and private sectors wherever this would best serve the needs of children and their parents and fulfil the principles of 'best value'. Whilst decisions on partnerships will rest with local authorities, I have again drawn their attention to the Government's wider policy goals in welfare reform and the development of a national childcare strategy. It would be counter-productive if expansion of pre-school education services at authorities' own hand inhibited the ability of other sectors to contribute to the Government's overall objectives.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he will use when reviewing progress made by local authorities in establishing partnerships with the private sector to provide pre-school education in 1999. [38629]

Mr. Wilson: The autumn review of partnership will look at the full range of possible partnership relations, as set out in last autumn's consultative paper "Education in Early Childhood: The Pre-School Years". It will include an assessment of the volume, type and location of pre-school education places which authorities have decided to commission from the private and voluntary sectors; and it will look at quality assurance initiatives in support of those places. I shall not be seeking to reach judgments about optimal levels of partnership activity, either locally or nationally, although I shall of course consider very seriously any evidence that cost-effective opportunities for partnership are being neglected.

Council Tax

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local authority area in Scotland the estimated additional council tax revenue which could be collected if the appropriate percentage referred to in section 79(3) of the Local government Finance Act 1992 was (a) 30 per cent., (b) 40 per cent. and (c) 50 per cent. [38670]

Mr. Macdonald: The "appropriate percentage", currently 25 per cent., is a discount from council tax bills where there is one person resident in a dwelling. Increasing that percentage would therefore, other things being equal, reduce rather than increase council tax revenue. The table estimates the additional revenue which would be forgone by each council in Scotland for each of the suggested "appropriate percentages", assuming no change to the council tax set by each council.

Bus Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the additional number of bus services which will be established as a result of the rural transport funding package announced by his Department in March; and if he will make a statement. [38667]

Mr. McLeish: I am confident that the £4.5 million package, the major part of which I am earmarking for aiding rural bus services, will significantly improve public transport links in rural areas. However, as we are currently consulting about the distribution of that proportion of the funding which will be made to local authorities, we have not yet made any predictions about the number of additional bus services which will be provided.

Student Loans

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to (a) give part-time students access to loans on the same basis as full-time students and (b) change the accounting rules so that student loans are counted as investment; what discussions he has held on this subject; with which bodies; and if he will make a statement. [38821]

Mr. Wilson: We have, at present, no plans to extend loans to part-time students. However, the provisions of the Teaching and Higher Education Bill would allow loans to be extended to part-timers in the future. We have already taken steps to assist part-time students who experience financial hardship by extending the availability of the Access Funds. We are also considering what other measures might be appropriate to their particular circumstances.

The Government's proposal to move to a system of full resource accounting and budgeting in 2001–02 will result in student loans being treated as a balance sheet asset in the Department's accounts. The precise treatment of student loans in the public accounts is ultimately a matter for the Treasury, but the Education Departments are exploring the question.

Licensed Premises

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has made to proposals by Glasgow Council for amendment of the laws and regulations covering licensed premises. [37619]

Mr. McLeish: Glasgow City Council has not submitted any recent proposals on laws and regulations covering licensed premises. Any such proposals would, of course, be given careful consideration.

Secondary Schools (Glasgow)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the educational performance of Glasgow's secondary schools. [37625]

Mr. Wilson: The Government and Glasgow City Council share the common objective of raising standards in all secondary schools and are pursuing a range of policies at national and local level to realise that objective.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people entered Gateway services to date in each of the Pathfinder areas; what was the average duration of the Gateway period; and how many have been referred or placed on the (a) employment, (b) education and training, (c) voluntary sector and (d) environmental task force options. [36346]

Mr. Andrew Smith: At week ending 3 April, 16,840 young people had entered the Gateway nationally. There have been 4,838 referrals (with, in some cases, more than one relating to any particular individual) to the Employment Option, 1,311 to the Full-time Education and Training Option, 353 to the Voluntary Option and 211 to the Environment Task Force Option. A table showing the breakdown of Pathfinder areas follows. It is too early to give the average duration of the Gateway period as the pathfinders only started on 5 January and there are insufficient numbers completing the Gateway to give a valid sample.

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to monitor the success of the New Deal in increasing employment rates for those young people with a history of delinquency. [38390]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The term "delinquency" is very broad and could legitimately be defined as including a range of anti-social behaviour, some of which could not be identified formally, for example, through a criminal record. As a key part of the evaluation of the New Deal, we will seek to relate the employment outcomes of individual New Deal participants to the characteristics, circumstances and labour market history of the individual, and to assess the extent to which these outcomes might have occurred in the absence of New Deal. As part of this work, we shall be addressing the significance of a criminal record in employment and the success of the New Deal in overcoming barriers it may create.

Skill Shortages (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from (a) industrialists and (b) other employers in the Seaham and Peterlee areas concerning skill shortages of the unemployed. [37859]

Dr. Howells: The Department received no representations from industrialists, and other employers in the Seaham and Peterlee areas concerning skill shortages of the unemployed.

Jobcentres

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is his estimate of the cost of refurbishing and repainting Employment Service offices in connection with the introduction of the New Deal; [38317]

(2) how much orange paint has been used in the redecoration of Employment Service offices in connection with the New Deal; and at what cost. [38318]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 7 April 1998]: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for replies to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Willetts, dated 21 April 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the estimated cost of refurbishing and repainting Jobcentres in connection with the introduction of the New Deal, and how much orange paint has been used, and its cost. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

As part of the overall programme of preparation for the introduction of New Deal, Ministers have authorised improvements to the environment of our Jobcentres including the provision of New Deal furniture and fittings.

You will see from the following table that overall capital expenditure in Jobcentres, including the improvements for New Deal, will be less in 1998–1999 than in previous years.

£ million

Year	Total
1993–94	57
1994–95	45
1995–96	38
1996–97	60
1997–98 (estimated)	40
1998–99 (estimated)	32

Much of this expenditure will substitute and accelerate other work which was already in planned expenditure. The expenditure, which is being monitored closely, has been authorised under strict guidelines that match the work to be done with the existing condition of the Jobcentre, its size, and the level of New Deal business expected. In connection with the introduction of New Deal, some £6.8M has so far been committed to this work.

It is not possible to identify precisely the cost of the orange paint used as part of the redecoration. However, in a typical Jobcentre the cost is likely to be around £20.

I hope this is helpful.

Mobile Children

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local education authorities who have applied for support of mobile children under section 488 of the Education Act 1996 indicating the amount granted for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [38058]

Mr. Byers: The total number of Local Education Authorities in England applying for support under Section 488 of the Education Act 1996 was 96 in 1996–97, 108 in 1997–98 and 125 in 1998–99. Total grant allocated for the financial years in question was £6,838,000 in 1996–97; £7,055,000 in 1997–98 and £7,275,000 in 1998–99.

Detailed information relating to England is shown in the following table.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals the Government have to encourage the provision of more workplace nurseries at affordable cost to parents. [38417]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We are keen to persuade employers of the benefits of helping employees with their childcare needs. Workplace nurseries are one way of doing this, but other ways may be more appropriate for, in particular, smaller companies.

Employers can claim their day-to-day expenditure on childcare provision or subsidies for their employees as an allowable expense when calculating their business profits for tax purposes. And the childcare tax credit announced in the Budget will make childcare more affordable for working parents.

Our national childcare strategy Green Paper, which we will be publishing in the next few weeks, will be considering how companies can be encouraged to adopt more "family-friendly" policies.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the decision of the TTA to re-direct in-service funding in the South West; and if he will publish the reasons underlying the re-direction. [39022]

Ms Estelle Morris: I understand that the Teacher Training Agency reached its decisions on the allocation of the relevant funding on the basis of competitive bids from providers to deliver in-service training for teachers judged according to their quality in meeting identified national priorities. The Agency has issued contracts for the academic year 1998–99. Final allocations for later years will be determined by the Agency in due course, taking account of the representations which have been received.

EU Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the EU Labour and Social Affairs Council of Ministers meeting on 7 April. [37182]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The Secretary of State for Education and Employment chaired the meeting of the Social Affairs Council on 7 April. The Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and I also attended.

There was discussion on National Employment Action Plans, the production of which was agreed at last November's "Jobs Summit" in Luxembourg, and on the Social Affairs Council's role in assessing them in advance of the Cardiff European Council in June 1998.

The Council adopted Conclusions on worker protection from asbestos, calling on the Commission to bring forward proposals. A Directive on the protection of workers from chemical agents was adopted.

The Council adopted a Directive extending to the United Kingdom the Part-time Work Directive, which had been adopted by the other 14 Member States last December under the Agreement on Social Policy. The Council had further discussion on the follow-up to the Davignon report on worker participation under the proposed European Company Statute.

The UK Presidency reported on the informal meeting of Education and Social Affairs Ministers held in London in March.

The Council noted Presidency Conclusions about the Commission's fundamental review of co-ordination of social security for migrant workers.

The Commission made presentations on reform of the Structural Funds; on its Action Plan on Racism and Xenophobia; on sectors excluded from the Working Time Directive; on a draft report from the High Level Group on Industrial Change; on draft amendments to the Carcinogens Directive; and on the PHARE Programme.

Student Loans

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to (a) give part-time students access to loans on the same basis as full-time students and (b) change the accounting rules so that student loans are counted as investment; what discussions he has held on this subject; with which bodies; and if he will make a statement. [38820]

Dr. Howells: We agree with the Dearing Committee's recommendation that extending loans to part-time students in higher education should not be a priority. While we have taken alternative steps to protect part-time students who experience financial hardship, we have no plans to extend loans to them at this stage. The provisions of the Teaching and Higher Education Bill would, however, allow loans to be extended to part-timers at some time in the future and we will keep the position under review.

The Government's proposal to move to a system of full Resource Accounting and Budgeting in 2001–02 will result in student loans being treated as a balance sheet asset in the Department's accounts. Discussions on this issue are taking place as part of wider preparations for the introduction of Resource Accounting and Budgeting across government, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to make available details of the training programme to equip the Millennium Taskforce with the skills necessary to deal with the millennium bug; how this programme will be advertised through jobcentres; and if he will make a statement. [39055]

Dr. Howells: A national leaflet has been produced for employers and individuals describing the help that is available. Officials are discussing with the Employment Service how the leaflet can be best used in Jobcentres.

The members of the Task Force were drawn from organisations of and for disabled people, business (including small business), local government and trade unions with the intention of forming a group with the necessary breadth of knowledge, skills and experience of disability to report to Government on how best to secure comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people, taking account of the interests of all interested parties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Computer Systems

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list each major new computer system that (a) her Department, (b) non-departmental bodies and (c) agencies under her responsibility have purchased in the last five years; what was the initial purchase cost and what was the final cost; what was each system's (i) planned and (ii) actual date of commissioning; what major computer systems will be purchased by bodies in categories (a), (b) and (c) in the next financial year; and what is their estimated cost. [27848]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is listed in the table.

Marches and Parades

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been charged with offences relating to obstructing (a) the republican Rosslea Martyrs procession on 12 October 1997 and (b) traditional Orange Order and Black Institution church parades during 1997 in Newtownbutler. [37383]

Mr. Ingram: Of the thirty-nine people interviewed and charged in relation to the Rosslea Martyrs Parade, thirty-eight have been charged with 'obstructing a lawful activity in a public place'. Other offences charged include 'possession of an offensive weapon', 'disorderly behaviour', 'obstructing police' and 'dangerous driving'.

In relation to the Royal Black Preceptory parade in Newtownbutler, thirteen persons have been charged with the principal offence of 'obstructing a lawful activity in a public place' and a variety of ancillary offences including 'disorderly behaviour', 'riotous behaviour', 'possession of an offensive weapon', 'provocative conduct', 'criminal damage' and 'playing a recording of sounds which are threatening, abusive, or insulting'.

Stevens Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the terms of reference given to Mr. John Stevens prior to and during his inquiries. [37738]

Mr. Ingram: The terms of reference given to Mr. John Stevens were those stated in the summary of the Report published in 1990. They were recorded in the published summary of his report:

"investigating: the Dunmurra Police Station incident; the alleged disappearance of photo montages from Ballykinler Army Camp; the alleged leak of information associated with the murder of Mr. John Anthony Loughlin Maginn; and following consultation with the Chief Constable, any associated matters which came to light during the course of the Enquiry."

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the full findings of the second Stevens Inquiry. [37734]

Mr. Ingram: A summary was published. The full report remains confidential to the Chief Constable. It was not published because to do so would endanger the confidential nature of operational procedures.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will commission independent research to assess the numbers of individuals who have become vulnerable following the loss, theft or misuse of information, personal files or documents originating from the security services. [37735]

Mr. Ingram: An inquiry into this was conducted by Mr. John Stevens. Any individuals who became vulnerable were informed at the time.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ask the Director of Public Prosecutions in Northern Ireland to re-examine evidence presented by Mr. John Stevens in his January 1995 report. [37737]

Mr. Ingram: No. No useful purpose would be served by asking the DPP for Northern Ireland to re-examine information unless new evidence was produced that had a material bearing on the conclusions of the report.

Public Interest Immunity

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will take steps to ensure that public interest immunity is not used to prevent evidence of collusion being introduced in proceedings taking place in (a) criminal courts, (b) coroners' courts and (c) public or judicial inquiries. [37811]

Mr. Ingram: As was indicated by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 11 July 1997, Official Report, columns 616–17, Ministers of the present Government assent to public interest immunity only where the relevant Minister believes that disclosure of a document or piece of information will cause real damage to the public interest. The Secretary of State applies this test vigorously.

Where public interest immunity applies, the Secretary of State's policy is to make voluntary disclosure if she considers that the interest of justice outweighs the public interest in withholding the document or information in question. In all cases, a claim for public interest immunity is subject to the power of the court or other tribunal to order disclosure.

RUC Investigations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC investigations have been conducted into the loss or theft of documents and security files since 1982; how many officers and soldiers were charged with (i) disciplinary offences and (ii) criminal offences arising from such investigations; and how many were subsequently disciplined or punished. [37810]

Mr. Ingram: The required information is not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

Planning, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the extent of the developments at the Ballyreagh, Bowtown and Movilla Road districts in Newtownards (a) which have received planning permission and (b) for which planning applications are presently under consideration; and what proposals there are to improve the existing road infrastructure in this part of Newtownards. [37557]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for these matters have been delegated to the Planning Service and the Roads Service under Mr. T. W. Stewart and Mr. W. McCoubrey respectively. I have asked them to arrange for replies to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 8 April 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about housing developments in Newtownards.

The extent of the housing development in Ballyreagh, Bowtown and Movilla areas of Newtownards is most appropriately considered within the context of the North Down and Ards Area Plan. Since the commencement of the Plan in 1984, approximately 1650 houses have been built on land zones for development in the east of the town, and it is estimated that there is potential for a further 700 new houses. Planning permission has been granted for a substantial proportion of these dwellings.

There are two current planning applications proposing housing development on land not zoned for development in the Plan. These are:

(i) a site of 4.6 hectares at the Movilla Road end of Ballyreagh Road; and

(ii) a site of 20 acres at Bowtown Road end of Ballyreagh Road.

I hope this clarifies the position.

Letter from G. P. Fraser to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 6 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to respond to the roads element of your recently tabled PQ about the extent of developments and proposals to improve the existing roads infrastructure in the Ballyreagh, Bowtown and Movilla Road districts in Newtownards. In his absence, I am replying.

Roads Service has 2 proposals for the area in question. A scheme to provide a link between Bowtown Road and Portaferry Road, at an estimated cost of £1M, is currently included in the 6–15 year major road works programme and a scheme to realign a section of road adjacent to 116 Movilla Road, at an estimated cost of £50K, is included in a list of possible schemes for inclusion in the minor works programme for the Ards Borough Council area.

I hope you find this information helpful.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners (Canada)

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from the Canadian Government concerning the situation of British expatriate state pensioners living in Canada who do not receive any uprating of their pensions. [38727]

Mr. Denham: The Canadian Minister of Human Resources Development wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last September about this issue. Canadian Ministers have raised the matter from time to time in meetings with their UK counterparts. The last such occasion was in October 1997 when my Noble Friend, the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, met the Canadian Minister of Foreign Affairs in Ottawa.

There are competing demands and constraints on Social Security spending. In these circumstances, the Government believe that it would be wrong to raise expectations that uprating UK pensions paid abroad would be likely to attract priority.

National Insurance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the cost to public funds of the increase in national insurance rebates on appropriate personal pensions to compensate for the impact of lost investment income as a result of the removal of ACT credits on dividends on UK equities. [38792]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 12 March 1998, Official Report, columns 355–56.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages of (i) taxing and (ii) means-testing disability living allowance. [38994]

Mr. Denham: We have concluded and made clear in the Green Paper, "New ambitions for our country: A new contract for welfare", that Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) will remain universal, national benefits and as such they will not be subject to a means test. Taxation matters are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Green Paper does not include any proposals to tax DLA or AA.

Lone Parents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, columns 738–39, how many lone parents who gained employment between: (a) 1 July and 22 October 1997, (b) 23 October and 30 November 1997, (c) 1 December and 31 December 1997, (d) 1 January and 31 January 1998 and (e) 1 February and 28 February 1998, are now in receipt of income support and have no earnings. [37592]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 7 April 1998]:

The number of lone parents who obtained employment and who are now in receipt of income support and have no earnings

Period	Number of lone parents who obtained employment/increased hours	Number of lone parents who obtained employment/increased hours, but who are now in receipt of Income Support and have no earnings
21 July-22 October 1997	518	87
23 October—30 November 1997	391	69
1 December—31 December 1997	141	20
1 January—31 January 1998	228	23
1 February—28 February 1998	240	28

The Government are conducting a full independent evaluation of the New Deal for Lone Parents which will report in Autumn 1999. This will assess the programme's overall effectiveness, and will measure the percentage of lone parents moving into work as a result of the New Deal for Lone Parents.

Notes

1. Figures are given from the 21 July rather than 1 July as this was when the first prototype of the New Deal for Lone Parents started.
2. The figures given for the number of lone parents who have found employment include those lone parents who have increased their hours whilst participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents.
3. The figures in the third column differ slightly from those in my Written Answer 7 April 1998, Official Report, columns 738–739, which sought similar information for the periods of 23 October-30 November 1997, 1–31 December 1997, and 1–31 January 1998. This is because the figures given in this reply represents information as of 17 April 1998 and not as of 18 March 1998.

Welfare Reform Review

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will place in the Library a list of consultees for the Welfare Reform Review. [38389]

Mr. Field: We are encouraging the widest possible debate on how best to rebuild the welfare system so it is fit for the 21st century. The Green Paper, "New Ambitions for our Country: a new contract for welfare", which we published on 26 March, is the next stage on the road to reform and we are seeking views on its proposals from all sections of the community by 31 July 1998.

There is no narrow list of consultees, all views are welcome and to maximise this debate we have published a free summary version and made this and the full document accessible via the Internet (www.dss.gov.uk). Copies of both documents are also available on request in braille, audiocassette, Welsh and large print.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the average length of time taken to hear appeals from people whose incapacity benefit has been withdrawn under the all-work-test in the Seaham and Peterlee areas; and how many appeals remain outstanding. [37865]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The operation of the appeals system is a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) who report that the statistics it maintains do not differentiate between those appeals which concern the All Work Test and those which concern other aspects of entitlement to Incapacity Benefit.

Incapacity Benefit appeals for people living in the Seaham area are heard at ITS's Sunderland tribunal venue, whilst those for people living in the Peterlee area are heard at Durham. The latest available figures show that the average length of time between lodgement and hearing of an Incapacity Benefit appeal in Sunderland is 20 weeks and in Durham is 23 weeks. For the North East Region of ITS as a whole, the average time is 20 weeks. Figures for the number of Incapacity Benefit appeals awaiting determination are not available for the individual tribunal venues, but for the North East Region as a whole the current total is 4,306.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what initiatives her Department is undertaking to involve the private sector in Benefits Agency business; which companies are involved; which areas of Benefits Agency core business are affected; when the results are expected; and if she will make a statement. [38990]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 20 April 1998]: There are currently two initiatives under way within the Benefits Agency involving the private sector. Neither has yet reached a contract stage. The Accommodation and Office Service (AOS) Project is exploring whether further private sector involvement could improve the delivery of office related services. The Area Directorates and Partnering Team (ADAPT 98) Project involves three private sector consortia working in partnerships with three BA Area Directorates in order to gain a full understanding of BA operations and to formulate proposals for improvements in service delivery.

The administration of these initiatives is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Brian M. Donohoe dated 21 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what initiatives her Department is undertaking to involve the private sector in Benefits Agency (BA) business; which companies are involved; which areas of BA core business are affected and when the results are expected.

There are currently two initiatives under way within the BA involving the private sector. Neither has yet reached a contract stage.

Accommodation and Office Services (AOS) Project

The AOS Project is exploring whether further private sector involvement could improve the delivery of office related services, mainly within the BA. The services involved are typing and word processing, messengerial, fleet management, shuttle buses, secretarial, reprographics, some archival storage, post opening and despatch, stationery and telephony.

The companies invited to tender to provide the services are: Rentokil Initial Management Services, Haden Building Management Limited, SERCO Government Services Limited, AMEC Facilities Limited and Partnership Property Management Limited. On current timetable, a decision is expected in the summer.

Area Directorates and Partnering Team Project (ADAPT 98)

The ADAPT 98 Project involves three private sector consortia working in partnerships with three of the BA's Area Directorates (ADs). The private sector partners are:

Eisis, a consortium comprising EDS as the prime contractor with AT Kearney, Price Waterhouse Management Consulting Ltd and Manpower Plc as subcontractors. Eisis are partnering AD1 East London and Anglia;

Equip, an alliance between Capita and AT&T with Aon Risk Services, Bull Information Systems and Group 4. Equip are partnering AD10 Yorkshire; and SeAD, a consortium led by Sema Group and made up of Sema Group, WS Atkins and Deloitte and Touche with Hays plc and Nat West Bank Group as sub-contractors. SeAD are partnering AD4 West Country.

The partnerships between the private sector and the ADs began on 13 August 1997 and will last for up to 12 months. During this Partnership Period, the private sector partners' primary activity is to gain a full understanding of BA operations and to formulate proposals for improvements in service delivery.

We expect to receive proposals from all the private sector partners by the end of the Partnership Period. There are no predetermined outcomes to the Project and no commitments have been given about the nature and timing of any contracts which may be let following the Partnership Period.

Proposals will be evaluated against Ministers' criteria for use of the private sector as well as value for money considerations.

I hope that this is helpful.

Focus Group Research

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the companies she has commissioned to undertake focus group research indicating the individual projects they are undertaking and the companies that tendered for each contract. [38218]

Mr. Field [pursuant to his reply, 7 April 1998, c. 223–24]: The Department publishes a Research Yearbook which contains details of contracts awarded in the relevant financial year.

Organisations commissioned to undertake focus group research for the Department and the title of each contract are as follows:

Newchurch and Company—Child Support Agency customer and compliance research.

Market Opinion Research International—Attitudes towards welfare reform.

Market Opinion Research International—Attitudes to disability benefits.

British Market Research Bureau International—Attitudes towards housing benefits.

Institute for Employment Studies—People management in DSS Headquarters.

Social and Community Planning Research—On-going contract for qualitative research on welfare reform issues.

Social and Community Planning Research—Survey of women; developmental work.

Social and Community Planning Research—Preparation for Women's Juries.

Social and Community Planning Research—Work Incentives and Intermediaries.

Social and Community Planning Research—Take up of Income Support amongst Older Citizens.

Centre for Research in Social Policy, Loughborough University—Earnings Top Up Staff Panel.

Centre for Research in Social Policy, Loughborough University—Invalidity Benefit and the Contributory principle.

Alan Hedges—Pensions and Retirement Planning.

Alan Hedges—Behavioural Response to the evidence requirements.

Andrew Irving Associates—Counter fraud publicity.

One World—New Deal for Lone Parents: development of publicity work.

Navigator—Fraud: attitudes to national benefit fraud hotline publicity.

Reflexions—Fraud: reporting changes in circumstances.

Michael Herbert—Pensions: approaches to information material.

Cragg Ross Dawson—Creative Development Research for a New Deal for Lone Parents Newsletter.

Market Opinion Research International—Development for New Deal for Lone Parents' Messages.

Research contracts are normally let by competitive tender, although the Department also makes use of the Central Office of Information's framework agreement with approved suppliers. Single tender may be used, for example where a supplier has special expertise or experience, is the sole supplier or has sole access to records or data, or in cases of extreme urgency. Details of organisations who have tendered unsuccessfully for contracts is commercial in confidence.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 22 April 1998

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce training programmes for the judiciary on international human rights standards and on the jurisprudence of international human rights bodies. [38915]

Mr. Hoon: This question was originally tabled for answer by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, but has been transferred to the Lord Chancellor's Department which has responsibility for judicial training in Northern Ireland.

Arrangements for judicial training are undertaken by the Judicial Studies Board for Northern Ireland, which is serviced and funded by the Northern Ireland Court Service. On 20 February the Lord Chancellor delivered the Board's Annual Address on "The Incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights". The Board's current programme includes a series of training events on the Convention and future events are planned.

Welsh Language (Family Courts)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has recently received on the question of the payment of translators to and from the Welsh language in family courts; and if he will make a statement. [38018]

Mr. Hoon: I have not recently received any representations about the payment of Welsh language translators, but I am aware that court staff occasionally receive representations about this. The Court Service will arrange and pay for translators in all family proceedings where necessary in county courts and the High Court. Magistrates courts are considering whether to introduce this facility.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 March 1998, Official Report, columns 788–89, concerning information, promotional marketing and opinion survey contracts, if he will provide a breakdown of the item 1999–2000, information meetings. [38447]

Mr. Hoon: When Part II of the Family Law Act 1996 is implemented, all married people wishing to divorce will be required to attend an information meeting. A series of pilots are being run in a number of areas throughout England and Wales aimed at finding the best system for delivering the information meeting.

All aspects of the pilot projects are being objectively tested through a major evaluation programme which is being conducted in five phases between March 1997 and May 1999. The views of the public who attend meetings, those involved in the organisation and delivery of the pilots and all relevant professionals and organisations within the pilot areas are being sought as part of the evaluation programme. The item referred to is the projected grant in aid expenditure for the evaluation programme and is broken down as follows:

1996–1997: £24,415

1997–1998: £546,892

1998–1999: £650,000

1999–2000: £150,000.

Lawyers (Contingency Fees)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received on the subject of contingency fees payable to lawyers; and if he will make a statement. [38453]

Mr. Hoon: I do occasionally receive letters about contingency fees. However the Government propose to extend the types of proceedings for which conditional fee agreements are available. Those proposals were set out in the consultation paper Access to Justice with Conditional Fees which was published on 4 March. The consultation paper invited responses and thirty-five have been received to date.

Legal Aid (Personal Injury Claims)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he will take to ensure access to legal aid for children involved in personal injury claims. [38586]

Mr. Hoon: The Government's proposed reforms to legal aid and conditional fees will increase access to justice for everyone, young or old. We believe that it will be possible for people regardless of age or financial standing to find lawyers to take P.I. cases through conditional fee agreements. It is important that we re-focus the Legal Aid Fund towards the areas where it can bring greatest help and do most good, and in which there is no alternative to publicly funded help with legal fees.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Trunk Road Network

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the United Kingdom primary trunk road network is currently maintained to the 45HB standard. [39040]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 April 1998]: For trunk roads in England, for which the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions has responsibility, our best estimate is that approximately 80% of the network is currently maintained to the 45HB standard.

Toxic Smoke

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to limit the generation of toxic smoke and fumes from building products. [39296]

Mr. Raynsford: The Building Regulations 1991 are intended to secure the health and safety of people in and around buildings, and paragraph B of Schedule 1 to the Regulations makes functional requirements to cover fire safety. Guidance on how these requirements may be met are given in Approved Document B, and, as far as materials used in construction are concerned, performance standards are set based on recognised test methods.

With regard to the generation of toxic smoke and fumes from building products, there is no recognised method of test as yet that provides a practicable performance standard that would be satisfactory for regulatory purposes. Although the Single Burning Item test being developed in support of the Construction Products Directive does address smoke production, it does not consider toxicity.

Child Restraints

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his assessment of the level of compliance with the legislation relating to safety restraints for children in the rear of motor vehicles; if he will take steps to monitor compliance with the legislation; if he will introduce legislation to make the fitting of child restraints in the rear seats of motor vehicles compulsory; and if he will make a statement. [38931]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Transport Research Laboratory survey seat belt wearing rates in motor vehicles twice yearly on behalf of the Department. The latest results—for October 1997—show that for children aged 0–4 years the wearing rate was 85% observed in all cars (ie including those not fitted with rear restraints), and that for children aged 5–13 years was 71%.

We have no plans at present to make the fitting of child restraints in the rear seats of motor vehicles compulsory as this would be harsh on parents who depend on others for lifts, or who have older cars without rear seat belts or anchorage points. But, serious injuries to children can be significantly reduced if they are in a suitable seat restraint and we strongly recommend they should always be used wherever fitted. We are also planning a publicity campaign later in the year to encourage seat belt wearing, particularly in the rear of motor cars.

London Underground

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on developments on London Underground since his statement on 20 March. [39422]

Mr. Prescott: I have decided to restructure the London Transport Board, bringing in a part-time non-executive Chairman. The present Chairman of London Transport (LT), Peter Ford, who is a full-time executive Chairman, has therefore been asked to vacate the chairman's job. Mr. Ford will therefore leave LT today.

I should like to pay tribute to the commitment Peter Ford has shown to London Transport over the past three and a half years. His period as Chairman has seen a marked increase in the number of passengers using the Underground and the London buses, reaching record levels. There has also been a major improvement in the financial performance of both businesses, and of LT as a whole, such that LT now makes a substantial contribution to its investment programme. Peter Ford has been an untiring advocate for London Transport, and his contribution to thinking and debate about the future has been significant. I am grateful to him, and wish him well for the future.

The changes I am making will cover the period during which we will be implementing the London Underground Public Private Partnership which I announced last month, and the run up to the creation of the Greater London Authority. I have concluded that the best arrangement will be to move to a new senior management structure. I shall be announcing new appointments to the LT Board in due course. Mr. Brian Appleton, currently non-executive Vice chairman of the LT board, has agreed to act as Chairman until a permanent appointment can be made.

Business Rates

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those authorities where the business rate base represents more than 60 per cent. of the combined total of their business and council tax bases. [38573]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is in the table.

Authorities where the business rate represents more than 60 per cent. of the combined total of their business and council tax bases in 1998–99.

Based on estimated yield from the uniform business rate and assumed income from the council tax for standard spending.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list for each local authority in England, what the additional business rate would have been if a local business rate had varied by the same percentage in relation to the national business rate as the authority had budgeted for the council tax to vary in relation to CTSS; [38572]

(2) if he will list for each local authority in England which spends above SSA, what the additional business rate poundage would have been (a) if the cost of the additional spending above SSA had been borne entirely by local businesses and (b) if the cost of additional spending above SSA had been shared equally by local businesses and council tax payers, assuming in each case no change in the local business base. [38576]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the information requested.

Council Tax

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list for each local authority what their average council tax in each band would have been if they had budgeted to spend at SSA in 1998–99; [38574]

(2) if he will list for each local authority (a) what the band D council tax would have been in 1998–99 with no additional council tax benefit subsidy for any council tax levied above the CTSS and with the changes having equal effect on billing and non-billing authorities and (b) how this differs from the actual band D tax levied in 1998–99. [38575]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each local authority the extent to which they are budgeted to spend at, above or below SSA in 1998–99. [38577]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Medicinal Drugs (Children)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance he has given (a) paediatricians and (b) general practitioners on the prescription of drugs to children which are not licensed for the treatment of children; and if he will make a statement; [36170]

(2) how many cases have been recorded in each regional health authority in each of the last 10 years, where children have been prescribed treatments which are (a) unlicensed for use on children and (b) not used in accordance with labelled instructions; [36171]

(3) if he will investigate the extent of the use of unlicensed treatments on children; and if he will make a statement. [36172]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the use in practice of medicines which are not licensed for children is not collected centrally. Doctors have access to clinical guidance on the use of specific medicines which are not licensed for children—to enable them to have sufficient knowledge to take responsibility for treatment. Most medicines prescribed in these circumstances are used in accordance with practice established by specialists in the field, where there is evidence or a sound theoretical basis for the use of the medicine in children and where therapeutic benefit has been established. We do not propose to undertake an investigation but understand the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health is giving this matter further consideration. We shall be guided by any recommendations made by the College.

Osteopathy

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make osteopathy available on the NHS. [38324]

Ms Jowell: Health authorities are able to include osteopathy services within the range of health services commissioned to meet local health needs, if they wish to do so. Availability of osteopathic treatment within the National Health Service depends, therefore, on the decisions taken locally by health authorities and general practitioners about the clinical and cost effectiveness of such services, and the priority to be given to their provision in the light of other competing demands for the resources made available for local health needs.

Health Authority Appointments

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appointments to local health authorities and NHS trusts have been temporarily extended until the end of June. [39285]

Mr. Milburn: The appointment of 283 chairmen and non-executive members of health authorities came to an end on 31 March 1998, 3 had already indicated that they wished to stand down. The remaining 280 were asked to accept a further 3 month appointment until a substantive appointment could be made and 250 have now done so.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the (a) number and (b) proportion of remedial procedures for dealing with suspected pre-cancerous cervical conditions that reduce the likelihood of future pregnancies in the patients treated. [39160]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 20 April 1998]: There is little evidence to suggest that any form of current treatment for suspected pre-cancerous cervical conditions identified by cervical screening, including destruction of cervical lesions by laser treatment and large loop excision of the cervical transformation zone, shows a significant adverse effect on fertility or on a woman's risk of having a miscarriage.

AIDS

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will fund research for a vaccination against AIDS. [38765]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health gave on 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 57.

Benzodiazepine

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions were issued for benzodiazepine drugs in the last year for which figures are available; and at what cost. [39282]

Mr. Milburn: 13.9 million prescription items for benzodiazepines were dispensed in the community in England in 1996. The net ingredient cost was £14.7 million.

Hospital Car Parking

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy towards NHS trusts introducing car parking charges on hospital sites; and if he will make a statement. [39313]

Mr. Milburn: Whether or not to charge for parking is a matter for hospitals to decide in the light of local circumstances—for example the space available for car parking and the location of the hospital. Where charges are introduced patients who are eligible to claim reimbursement of travelling expenses under the hospital travel costs scheme may have the charges reimbursed. Good practice guidance on the wider issues surrounding car parking in the National Health Service has been issued to all trusts in Health Facilities Note 21. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Condoms

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy towards the zero-rated VAT status of condoms; and what plans he has to seek to redefine condoms as medicinal devices under European legislation. [39314]

Mr. Milburn: Policy on Value Added Tax is a matter for the Her Majesty's Treasury. Condoms fall within the definition of medical devices under the terms of the European Directive 93/42/EEC which is implemented in the United Kingdom by the Medical Devices Regulations (Statutory Instrument 1994 No. 3017). The UK has no plans to seek to redefine the status of condoms.

National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the sixth annual report of the National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit. [39417]

Mr. Dobson: The National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit's sixth annual report has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. The report documents the Unit's findings in relation to sporadic, familial and iatrogenic Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD) up to 30 April 1997 and in relation to new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (nvCJD) up to 1 January 1998.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Utility Markets

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 61, on utility markets, if the utility regulators will be given the same level of investigatory powers as the Office of Fair Trading under the Competition Bill. [38664]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 April 1998]: Yes, in relation to their sectors.

Asteroids

Mr. Öpik: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans she has to increase the funding, over the next four years, to agencies which examine near earth objects; and if he will make a statement; [38954]

(2) what is the total Government provided funding for research into near earth objects in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [38953]

Mr. Battle: In this financial year, the DTI will spend some £50,000 on relevant activity including our contribution to a European Space Agency (ESA) study into improved monitoring of Near Earth Objects (NEOs) from space. In addition, the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (PPARC) will spend £1.6 million this financial year on instruments for the ESA Rosetta mission. This will land a probe on the comet Wirtanen in 2011 and analyse the internal structure of the comet. Results from this mission are expected to inform work on monitoring and other aspects of the subject.

The Government have no immediate plans for additional activity. Applications to support scientific studies of asteroids may be made to PPARC and will be assessed against other space science priorities.

Utilities (Call-out Charges)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has made to the regulators of utilities with respect to call-out charges. [38767]

Mrs. Beckett: I have made no representations to the regulators of the gas, electricity and telecommunications utilities with respect to call-out charges.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy to place on the agenda of the next European Energy Council meeting the issue of measures to combat nuclear materials and technology smuggling. [38728]

Mr. Battle: Issues relating to nuclear materials and technology smuggling—export controls, nuclear materials accountancy and control and physical protection—would, by virtue of competence falling to the Community under the Euratom Treaty for nuclear materials accountancy, or because the issues come under discussions held under the Common Foreign and Security Policy, normally fall within the remit of the General Affairs rather than Energy Council.

However, because it is important to continue worldwide efforts to prevent and, when it occurs, combat nuclear materials and technology smuggling, discussion of an agreement on appropriate measures occurs primarily amongst G8 and within the IAEA. The Government believe these wider international fora remain appropriate for ensuring continuing effective collaborative international action.

SCOTLAND

Homophobic Crime

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those police services in Scotland which monitor and record incidents of homophobic crime; [39209]

(2) if he will list, by police authority, the number of homophobic incidents recorded in each of the last five years; [39210]

(3) what estimate he has made of the under-reporting of homophobic crime; [39211]

(4) if he will list by police authority and by category of offence, the type of offences reported or recorded as homophobic crime. [39214]

Mr. McLeish: Police Forces in Scotland do not record incidents of homophobic crime and from the information collected centrally from police forces, it is not possible to determine offences or incidents of homophobic crime. Consequently, I am not able to make any estimate of under-reporting.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to increase the confidence of homosexual people in reporting crimes against them to the police. [39212]

Mr. McLeish: The police are aware of developing trends in crime and can gear their response accordingly. For example, Lothian & Borders Police, in recognition of attacks against homosexuals, have for some time now had an officer with particular responsibility for liaising with gay and lesbian groups. This approach has encouraged the gay community to come forward with information about assaults which were not hitherto being reported to the police and has allowed the police to respond appropriately. Other Forces are following suit in the light of the scale of the problem in their respective Force areas. We will keep the matter under review in consultation with the Police.

Incapable Adults

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will bring forward proposals for legislation based on the consultation paper, "Managing the Finances and Welfare of Incapable Adults". [38634]

Mr. McLeish: No decision has yet been taken on when we shall be able to bring forward such legislation.

TREASURY

Employment Returns

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of people following his Budget who will have (a) increased returns from employment and (b) reduced returns from employment; and if he will make a statement. [36378]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Budget reformed the tax and benefit system in order to make work pay. It included a number of measures specifically designed to increase the return from work, such as:

- The abolition of the entry fee in employee NICs which will mean all employees earning more than the Lower Earnings Limit will gain £66 per year.
- The Working Family Tax Credit which will guarantee every family working full time an income of at least £180 per week.
- The child care tax credit within WFTC, which will significantly boost in work incomes for many lone parents and two earner couples with children.

Those for whom the tax benefit system presents the greatest disincentive to work will, on average, see the largest increase in their return to work.

Inheritance Tax (Heritage Property)

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the forms of monitoring by (a) the Inland Revenue and (b) other agencies of owners' compliance with the undertaking they make in relation to publicity, access and entry under their terms of conditional exemption from inheritance tax on heritage property; when such monitoring last took place in respect of exempt (i) properties and (ii) works of art in (1) East Sussex, (2) West Sussex and (3) Brighton and Hove local authority areas; and in how many cases over each of the last 10 years exemption has been lost or deferred tax charged as a result of breaches brought to light by this monitoring. [36761]

Dawn Primarolo: Owners' compliance with their undertakings relating to tax exempt land and buildings is monitored on behalf of the Inland Revenue by the appropriate heritage advisory agency. As part of this monitoring, owners have to submit annual reports covering public access, publicity and other conditions of exemption; and there are on-site inspections every five years. In addition, the Inland Revenue separately review all cases at five yearly intervals.

Public access and other conditions relating to exempt works of art and chattels are monitored directly by the Inland Revenue. Each case is reviewed every five years and there is an annual selective audit of objects to which public access is only by prior appointment.

Exempt assets situated in East Sussex and West Sussex, which also cover Brighton and Hove local authority areas, were last monitored in 1997.
Conditional exemption may cease to apply due to various reasons including a sale of the exempt asset or a material failure by the owner to comply with the undertakings.

The number of instances in each of the last ten years when assets have ceased to be conditionally exempt from inheritance tax, or its predecessor, capital transfer tax are as follows. However, the reasons for the exemption ceasing to apply in particular cases are not recorded centrally.

Year	Number of instances
1988–89	74
1989–90	85
1990–91	69
1991–92	39
1992–93	37
1993–94	65
1994–95	62
1995–96	70
1996–97	83

Working Families Tax Credit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if recipients of working families tax credit will receive the same entitlement to passported benefits as do recipients of family credit. [37851]

Dawn Primarolo: The current assumption is that those who are presently entitled to passported benefits because they receive Family Credit will continue to be entitled to such benefits when the WFTC is introduced.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of introducing a working families tax credit on (a) the level of employment and (b) the control total in the next four years. [38219]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 April 1998]: The Government expect that their programme of tax and benefit reform to make work pay will, like its New Deals, help people move off welfare and into work.

Whether or not any part of the WFTC should score in the Control Total has not yet been decided.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 April 1998, Official Report, columns 553–54, on the working families tax credit, in estimating the cost of the working families tax credit, how many recipients of (a) the working families tax credit and (b) the childcare tax credit are assessed in the cost estimates for (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [39235]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 April 1998]: Around 800,000 families are currently in receipt of family credit; it is estimated that about 400,000 more families will be eligible for the Working Families Tax Credit.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the (a) cost in 1998–99 and (b) full year cost of revalorising (i) the non-aged personal allowance, (ii) the personal allowance for those between 65 and 74 years and (iii) the personal allowance for those aged 75 years and over. [39291]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimated costs are given in the table.

	Full year cost at 1998–99 income levels	First year cost at 1998–99 income levels
Indexing the personal allowance:
For those aged:
Under 65	860	640
65–74	70	50
75+	40	30

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the full year cost of transferring from a married person to their earning spouse an unused personal tax allowance where the former cares for an elderly or dependent relative; and if he will give this figure both on the basis that the married couples allowance (a) is and (b) is not, also given in these cases. [39289]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by what amount the real value of the under 65 years married couples allowance will have fallen between 1990–91 and (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000 taking account of the reductions in the rate at which the allowance is given and assuming that the allowance is increased in 1999–2000 in line with inflation; [39293]

(2) by how much the real value of the personal allowance will have increased between 1990–91 and (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000 assuming that it is increased in line with inflation in 1999–2000. [39292]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is given in the tables. These compare the level of the 1990–91 revalorised personal allowance and married couple's allowance against the actual level in 1998–99 and 1999–2000. It is assumed that allowances in 1999–2000 are indexed in line with an illustrative assumption of 3¼ per cent. given in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", March 1998.

[1] MCA given at marginal rates.
[2] MCA given at 15 per cent. in 1998–99 and 10 per cent. in 1999–2000.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the full year cost of giving all married people the option of transferring an unused personal tax allowance to their earning spouse; and if he will give this figure both on the basis that the married couples allowance (a) is and (b) is not also given in these cases. [39288]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year cost in 1998–99 of allowing married couples to transfer their unused personal allowance to their spouse is estimated to be £3.2 billion. However, if couples were given the choice between transferring their unused personal allowances but losing their MCA, or keeping their MCA and not transferring, the cost would be £2.1 billion.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the full year cost of transferring from a married person to their earning spouse an unused personal tax allowance where that person's youngest child is (a) under five, (b) under 11 and (c) under 16 years at the beginning of the tax year; and if he will give these figures both on the basis that the married couples allowance (i) is and (ii) is not, also given in these cases. [39290]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated cost of allowing married couples with children to transfer their unused personal allowance to their spouse are given in the table.

European Investment Bank

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the (a) total and (b) yearly level of loan facilities provided by the European Investment Bank to the United Kingdom since 1993; and what are the corresponding figures for each other EU member state. [38889]

Mrs. Liddell: The table shows the total finance contracts signed (including individual and global loans) for the UK and other EU Member States for each year from 1993–1997 and in total.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Inland Revenue definition of millennium conversion expenditure used for taxation purposes; and to what extent the definition includes expenditure on the development of new systems. [39153]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax regime provides that only those expenses which are revenue, not capital, in nature and which are incurred wholly and exclusively for business purposes may be allowed as a deduction when calculating trading profits for tax purposes. The Inland Revenue view is that an in-house or contracted out software project to ensure that existing systems can be adapted for the millennium will always be a revenue matter unless it is part of a major new project instituting other changes and the project is of a capital nature. Small and medium businesses will benefit from the accelerated first year allowances announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget.

Inland Revenue (Child Care)

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the definition of workplace provision of childcare used by the Inland Revenue in determining whether contributions to childcare qualify as benefits in kind. [39149]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax treatment of child care benefits is explained in the Inland Revenue leaflet IR115 "Tax and Childcare". An article in issue 34 of the Inland Revenue's Tax Bulletin magazine, published on 20 April sets out the Inland Revenue's view on what is required to satisfy the conditions of the workplace nursery exemption (Section 155A ICTA 1988) where an employer gets together with others to provide child care.

Oxford Economic Forecasts

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the key assumptions used in the model of Oxford Economic Forecasts. [38888]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury monitors over 40 independent forecasts of the UK economy and periodically reviews aspects of the models used by the major forecasting institutions, including Oxford Economic Forecasting.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the planned expenditure on anti-smuggling, set out at table 3, page 19 of HM Customs and Excise Departmental report, 1998, (Cm 3918) is allocated to combat nuclear materials smuggling. [38730]

Dawn Primarolo: Planned expenditure on combating the smuggling of nuclear materials is included in the figures for Protection of Society in table 4 of page 28 of the Report (table 3 deals with UK revenue). This expenditure relates to the integral control of a wide range of prohibited and restricted items. I regret that it is not possible to disaggregate a figure for specific goods.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many instances of the smuggling into the United Kingdom of illicit nuclear materials have been detected since 1990. [38726]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs have detected no instances of the smuggling into the United Kingdom of illicit nuclear materials during the period since 1990.

Herbal Stimulants

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the herbal stimulants that are (a) regarded as food products and are zero rated for VAT and (b) regarded as stimulants and are subject to the standard rate of VAT; [38622]

(2) what criteria are used to determine which herbal products are classed as food products and which as stimulants. [38623]

Dawn Primarolo: A list of herbal stimulants is not held centrally, but the general rule for VAT purposes is that herbs supplied for culinary use are zero-rated. Decisions on the liability of herbal stimulants and remedies are taken case by case if they fall outside the guidance given in Customs and Excise VAT Notice 701/38, which sets out the liability of seeds and plants. The test is whether or not they are "food of a kind use for human consumption" within the normal meaning of those words.

Budgets (Environmental Assessments)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 April 1998, Official Report, column 622, what plans he has to improve the methods used for the environmental assessment of budget measures for future budgets. [38823]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The Government will review the environmental assessment of Budget measures in time to inform future Budgets.

Tax Evasion (Hackney)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to tackle tax evasion in the London Borough of Hackney. [38646]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The tax Departments have continuing programmes of counter-evasion work which cover all parts of the United Kingdom. Resources are deployed to detect evasion across the tax system with an emphasis on areas of high tax risk.

Earnings

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number and proportion of people aged (a) 21 years and under and (b) 25 years and under who earn less than (i) £3.50 per hour and (ii) £4 per hour; what percentage of the working population this represents; and if he will make a statement. [38966]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Lembit Opik, dated 22 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on hourly earnings.

This information is shown in the attached table using estimates available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS).

Work is being undertaken to assess the quality of earnings data from the LFS and the New Earnings Survey (NES). Current indications are that the LFS provides the more reliable estimates of workers on low pay, but nevertheless tends to overestimate the proportion of low paid workers. The figures in the table should therefore be taken as upper estimates of the proportions. Details of this assessment of the quality of earnings data are expected to be published in the May issue of Labour Market Trends, copies of which will be available from the House of Commons Library.

Abortions (Barnet)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many abortions were carried out on residents of the London Borough of Barnet in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and how many of these were (a) carried out in the NHS and (b) paid for by the NHS under an agency agreement. [39052]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Rudi Vis, dated 22 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on abortions in Barnet.

The information for residents of Barnet health authority is available in Table 22 for 1994, and Table 21 for 1995 and 1996 in the ONS Abortion Statistics publication, Series AB Nos. 21–23 for 1994 to 1996. These publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the rate of exchange for sterling's entry to EMU will be determined. [39326]

Mrs. Liddell: In accordance with Protocol 11 of the Treaty on European Union, the UK Government have informed the Council that they do not intend to move to the third stage of economic and monetary union on 1 January 1999. The Government will consider the question of how the exchange rate for sterling's entry to EMU will be determined if and when we decide to join.

Financial Services

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how the forthcoming legislation reforming the regulatory system for financial services will affect the role of auditors and actuaries. [39559]

Mrs. Liddell: The relationship between auditors, actuaries and the regulators is an important feature of the supervisory system in the UK. The financial services regulators take into account the role and responsibilities of both auditors and actuaries when determining the appropriate nature and intensity of regulatory supervision both at firm and industry level. I intend that the proposed new legislation to be published in the Summer will build on, and strengthen, this special relationship.

As now, the Financial Services Authority (FSA) will continue to be able to make rules requiring authorised firms to appoint an auditor where they are not already under a duty to do so. The legislation will also allow the FSA to make rules regarding the appointment of actuaries on the same basis. Where there is a need for an investigation or report on any aspect of an authorised firm's business, the FSA will continue to be able to either appoint, or require firms to use the services of, a qualified auditor, actuary or other professional.

I also propose that the FSA's current powers to sanction auditors should be extended to cover actuaries. This will allow the FSA to disqualify an auditor or actuary from being the auditor or actuary of any firm regulated by the FSA for a specified period where they have failed to inform the regulator about matters of regulatory concern uncovered in the course of their duties. The provisions which disapply any confidentiality requirements an auditor might breach in passing on such information would also be extended to actuaries. Although I would expect this to be a little used power, it is vital that the FSA should be able to rely on auditors and actuaries, with their expertise and special access to information, to let them know of any such concerns.

Bank of England

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Bank's power to collect information for monetary policy purposes. [39560]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's Response to consultation on the Bank's power to collect information for monetary policy purposes is published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Most respondents welcomed the move to a statutory basis for the Banks collection of information for monetary policy purposes. They acknowledged that as it was intended largely to place the existing scheme on a statutory basis, it did not imply any increase in costs for the foreseeable future.

The Government also assured respondents that the Bank would continue to consult on any major changes to the statistical system. The Government are concerned to ensure that the cost of supplying statistical information is kept to a minimum, consistent with meeting the information needs of the Bank. And the Act also requires the Treasury to consult appropriate representative institutions if any changes are proposed to the range of financial affairs, or to the categories of institutions from which information can be collected.

EU Budget

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the statement on the 1998 Community Budget; and if he will make a statement. [39612]

Mrs. Liddell: I have today laid before Parliament the Statement on the 1998 Community Budget, entitled "European Community Finances". This White Paper is the eighteenth in the series. As in the past, it covers annual budgetary matters and includes details of recent developments in European Community financial management and in countering fraud against the Community Budget. It also describes the Community Budget for 1998 as adopted by the European Parliament, and the United Kingdom's gross and net contributions to the Community Budget between 1995 and 1998.

I have placed copies of the White Paper in both Libraries of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Publications

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those European Commission (a) newsletters, (b) magazines and (c) occasional publications to which his Department subscribes. [33666]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This Department subscribes to such European Commission newsletters, magazines and other publications as are necessary to support its work.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those compliance cost assessments published during the latest six month period. [39443]

Dr. David Clark: The Government are committed to ensuring that regulations are necessary, give effective protection, balance cost and risk, are fair and command public confidence. In accordance with this, we require Departments to produce and publish CCAs for all regulatory proposals likely to have an impact on business, charities and the voluntary sector.

I have presented to Parliament today a Command Paper listing 77 CCAs and regulatory appraisals incorporating CCAs published between 1 July 1997 and 31 December 1997. This is the eighth such Command Paper.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Development Assistance

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on access to information about EU aid projects. [38439]

Clare Short: The Commission and the Council are committed to the principle of allowing the public the widest possible access to documents held by the Commission and Council. Details on how to access information are contained in the Code of Conduct concerning public access to Commission and Council documents. This covers all types of information about a project, but does contain a list of exceptions—documents considered commercially or politically sensitive do not need to be released. This can include some aid documentation such as aid strategy agreements with third countries and project financing proposals put to the Management Committees (whose dealings are confidential).

All commercial tenders (whether restricted or open) have to be published in the Official Journal which is available on the Internet: by this means a lot of information about aid projects is put into the public domain. The Commission is generally regarded as getting better at improving its efforts to provide information in this area too. However, although the principles on releasing information are the same across all the external relations Directorates General (DG) each can interpret them differently. This can cause confusion, but the establishment of the Common Services Directorate (SCOOP) should help to standardise procedures and increase transparency. There are also designated information officers in each DG for the public to contact.

Refugee Camps (Abortion)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the health implications of the use of manual vacuum aspiration for elective abortions in refugee camps; and if she will make it her policy that manual vacuum aspiration for elective abortions should not be used in such circumstances. [38638]

Clare Short: Where permitted by law and provided in line with appropriate medical practice, manual vacuum aspiration (MVA) can have a useful role in protecting the health of a woman who seeks to terminate an unwanted pregnancy. MVA is also a valuable technique for treating incomplete abortions, whether spontaneous or induced.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 391, to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), for how long the review of the secure estate for juveniles has been in progress; and what is his current estimate of when the review will be published. [38579]

Mr. Michael: An initial review of juvenile secure accommodation has been undertaken as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. The review began in September and was completed at the end of March. The Government are now considering the outcome of the review and expect to make a statement shortly. My right hon. Friend has made clear the Government's intention of bringing coherence to the secure estate while achieving greater flexibility and effectiveness in the use of the secure estate and this will require a good deal of detailed work. Our plans were set out in the White Paper "No More Excuses—A New Approach to Tackling Youth Crime in England and Wales", (Cm 3809, November 1997).

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provision of secure accommodation for young offenders. [38532]

Mr. Michael: Juveniles who are held in custody on remand or sentenced can be placed in secure accommodation provided by the local authority or by central Government in Prison Service facilities, Secure Training Centres or in the Youth Treatment Centre.

The Government have undertaken an initial review of secure accommodation for juveniles as part of their Comprehensive Spending Review. This looked at the whole range of secure accommodation for children and young people. The Government are now considering the outcome of the review and expect to make a statement shortly.

My right hon. Friend has made clear the Government's intention of bringing coherence to the secure estate, while achieving greater flexibility and effectiveness in the use of the secure estate and this will require a good deal of detailed work. Our plans were set out in the White Paper "No More Excuses—A New Approach to Tackling Youth Crime in England and Wales", (Cm 3809, November 1997).

Home Office Circulars

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the Home Office circulars issued to (a) police forces, (b) police authorities and (c) the Association of Chief Police officers, in each of the last three years. [38662]

Mr. Michael: Home Office circulars are issued directly by the Home Office, not by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO). Guidance issued by ACPO is a matter for them. Circulars to the police were issued by the Home Office in 1995, 1996 and 1997 and copies of each have been placed in the Library.

Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish Dr. Simon Holdaway's Home Office-funded report on why ethnic minority police officers were resigning prematurely; [39169]

(2) if he will implement the conclusions of the Home Office-funded report on the racialisation of the British police. [39171]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The report by Dr. Simon Holdaway and Dr. Anne-Marie Barron was published independently last year by Macmillan Press Limited under the title "Resigners? The experience of Black and Asian Officers".

The decision that the report would not be published by the Home Office was taken in 1993. Its findings will be borne in mind. We are well aware of the need to ensure the retention of police officers from ethnic minorities and considerable work is being undertaken in the Home Office to understand the issues involved and to develop guidance for the police service in England and Wales.

The recent thematic report by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary is particularly helpful and chief police officers have been asked to consider how best to respond to its findings as a matter of urgency.

Parliamentary Boundary Commission (Wales)

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to appoint to the two vacant posts of Commissioner at the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales. [39663]

Mr. George Howarth: I am very pleased to announce that I have appointed Professor Kenneth George to serve as a Commissioner to fill one post and that my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales, has appointed Mrs. Susan Smith as a Commissioner to fill the other. Both appointments are effective until 31 December 2001.

Positional Asphyxia

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has obtained supporting the statement by the Director General of the Prison Service, broadcast on "Newsnight" on 25 March, concerning the relative likelihood of persons of Afro-Caribbean origins and persons of other ethnic origins suffering from positional asphyxia; and if he will publish this evidence. [39664]

Mr. Straw: An internal Prison Service report dated February 1996 identified a range of medical factors that would be likely to place an individual at greater risk of sudden death when being physically restrained and therefore liable to suffer from positional asphyxia. These include sickle cell disorders which more frequently occur in persons originating from regions of Africa or the Caribbean, the Mediterranean, the Middle East and India. This is a difficult area with differing expert views. The Prison Service will be commissioning further research into these important issues.

I am placing a copy of the report in the Library. Since the report had not originally been intended for publication, sections which identify personal information about specific individuals have been removed.

Homosexual Panic Defence

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report of the New South Wales Attorney General's Department into the homosexual panic defence; and if he will make a statement. [39216]

Mr. Michael: The Attorney General's Department of New South Wales issued a discussion paper in August 1996 entitled a "Review of the 'Homosexual Advance Defence'". The paper reviews recent cases in New South Wales and discusses the use of the defence where it is pleaded as part of a defence of self defence or provocation. It did not recommend any legislative changes in New South Wales, but suggested some changes in the model directions for judges, and greater education within the criminal justice system and the wider community. I understand a final report will be published in due course, and I await that with interest.

Homophobic Crime

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those police services in England which monitor and record incidents of homophobic crime; [39204]

(2) what estimate he has made of the under-reporting of homophobic crime; [39206]

(3) if he will list by police authority and by category of offence, the types of offences reported or recorded as homophobic crime; [39213]

(4) if he will list, by police authority, the number of homophobic incidents recorded in each of the last five years. [39205]

Mr. Michael: From the information collected centrally, it is not possible to determine offences or incidents of homophobic crime which, like a number of other identifiable categories such as domestic violence or violence between neighbours, cut across different categories of offence depending on the seriousness of the event or the nature of the evidence. Whilst the Home Office collects statistics on the number of recorded offences of, for example, violence against the person, indecent assault on a male, indecency between males and rape of a male, there is no way of identifying which offences within any offence type had a homophobic element. This makes it impossible to give a proper estimate concerning under-reporting.

In 1996, the Association of Chief Police Officers published a set of Good Practice Guidelines for Dealing with Homophobic Incidents. This included a definition of what should be regarded as a homophobic incident: "Any incident which appears to either the victim, investigating officer or any other person to be motivated by homophobia, that is, animosity towards lesbians and gay men". The guidelines also recommended that police forces should record and monitor such incidents.

A literature review has been conducted for the interdepartmental working group on vulnerable and intimidated witnesses; part of the report examined literature on hate crimes against sexual minorities. This report is being considered by Ministers.

There have been a few surveys published. For example, in a survey of gay men carried out in Lewisham as part of the Lewisham Safer Cities project in 1992, the vast majority reported experience of verbal abuse (81 per cent.) and approaching half reported being physically attacked. Property offences were less commonly reported.

Stonewall, the pressure group which campaigns for the civil rights of lesbians, gay men and bisexuals, has also carried out a nation-wide survey. Key findings included:

three quarters reported experiencing verbal abuse on at least one occasion; over a third of men and a quarter of women reported experiencing violence in the last five years because of their sexuality;

some groups, such as black, Asian, disabled and young respondents had greater risk of victimisation.

Both studies found repeat victimisation was common. They provide useful information, although it must be acknowledged that they may not provide a representative sample.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase the confidence of homosexual people in reporting crimes against them to the police. [39207]

Mr. Michael: The reluctance of homosexual people to report crimes committed against them was one of the issues raised in the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary's thematic inspection into police community and race relations published last October. The report recommended that forces should establish policies and strategies for the policing of incidents and crimes against the gay community, acknowledging their vulnerability as a minority group, and establish systems and practices to deal effectively with homophobic attacks including monitoring arrangements. Her Majesty's Inspectorate will be looking at what forces have done to implement the report during their programme of force inspections.

The Association of Chief Police Officers has published good practice guidelines which aim to ensure that effective means are in place to monitor, detect and prevent such incidents.

Consultation with gay and lesbian groups is recognised as an important means by which police officers can gain an understanding of the problems and issues that exist for lesbians and gay men, thereby engendering trust between that community and the police. The crime audits which the police and local agencies will be obliged to carry out under the Crime and Disorder Bill proposals will provide the means to get gay and lesbian issues onto the community safety agenda. The extensive guidance which will accompany the legislation will include references to the importance of involving these groups in this process.

Police Drivers (Training)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are given to police authorities on the (a) type and (b) amount of special training that must be given to police officers before they are allowed to drive police vehicles in emergency situations. [38538]

Mr. Michael: The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has provided forces with detailed guidelines on police driver training. ACPO's police driving report published in May 1989, made recommendations on the grading of drivers and the core elements and minimum lengths of training courses. Such training is progressive and is designed to develop the skills of drivers so that they increase their awareness of the range of factors that affect their own training, their own capabilities, the characteristics of the vehicles they drive, and road and traffic conditions. However, it is ultimately for individual chief constables to determine the extent of training received by their officers and how they are deployed.

Under current arrangements, officers attend Standard or Advanced driver training courses either in-force or regionally. They progress from Standard to Advanced driver training through patrol experience and driver ability.

Driver training is based on "Roadcraft", a published manual available to the public, the 1989 police driving report and the Horner Report of 1995 on pursuits. Following the death of Judith Hood, killed as a result of a collision with a police car driven by a driving instructor on a training exercise, ACPO set up a working party to examine police pursuit driving training. The working group has examined the recommendations of both the 1989 and 1995 reports which it considers to be good practice but the group has yet to complete its work. The key issue is the need to train officers so they are capable of understanding modern road conditions and exercise all due care when travelling at speeds and in conditions beyond those experienced by the general motorist. Attitudes of police drivers and computerised driver simulator training are key areas currently being explored by the working group.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend section 14 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989. [38902]

Mr. Michael: The future of all the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, including section 14, and the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts 1996 and 1998, is currently under consideration. The Government's thinking will be set out in the forthcoming consultation paper on permanent United Kingdom-wide counter-terrorism legislation.

Wireless Telegraphy

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provisions contained in Part III of the Police Act 1997 relating to actions with respect to property and wireless telegraphy. [38903]

Mr. Michael: We intend to implement the provisions contained in Part III of the Police Act 1997 as quickly as possible. Detailed work is continuing on a number of points relating to the appointment of Commissioners and the practical arrangements necessary to support their work. We intend to lay the draft code of practice on intrusive surveillance before Parliament during the Summer.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of each of the various components of disability living allowance there are in the Seaham and Peterlee areas. [37897]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Cummings, dated 21 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many recipients of each of the various components of Disability Living Allowance there are in the Seaham and Peterlee areas.

Disability Working Allowance

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many disability working allowance renewal forms were returned to claimants because they arrived too early during February and March; and if she will make a statement; [38113]

(2) what estimate she has made of the number of DWA forms that were returned because they arrived too early, separately identifying the costs of (a) staff time and (b) postage; and if she will make a statement. [38114]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Disability Working Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Joan Walley, dated 21 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many Disability Working Allowance (DWA) renewal forms were returned to claimants because they arrived too early during February and March, and what estimate she has made of the number of forms that were returned because they arrived too early, separately identifying the costs of (a) staff time and (b) postage.

The number of DWA renewal forms returned to claimants because they arrived too early during February and March 1998 was 222.

The estimated cost of staff time and postage incurred in returning DWA claims because they arrived too early during February and March has been estimated at £7.59 per case or a total of £1,684.98.

I hope that this is helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Sunderland received (a) £50, (b) £20 and (c) £10 winter fuel payments in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [37973]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for two years (1997–98 and 1998–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners living in the United Kingdom who receive a retirement pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this year's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data in around 15 million computer records, involving 15 qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost 10 million pensioners, in over 7 million households, have received a payment.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 21 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners in Sunderland received (a) £50, (b) £20 and (c) £10 winter fuel payments in the last year for which figures are available.

The making of winter fuel payments to almost ten million eligible pensioners, in over seven million households, before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency (BA). This will have been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support (IS) or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA(IB)), received their payment of £50 during January. Other eligible pensioners are entitled to a payment of £20 or £10. Where they live alone, are the only eligible pensioner in a household, or are of no fixed abode, they are entitled to £20; otherwise, they are entitled to £10, including each person in a pensioner couple if they are both in receipt of a qualifying benefit.

Not all of the information requested is available. The BA collates IS and JSA(IB) statistics by BA District Office. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries or this specific geographical area. Such information as is available relates to the number of instances in the Wearside BA District (which includes the offices of Houghton-le-Spring, Seaham and Wearside) where we made a £50 payment. A total of 11,187 £50 payments were made during January 1998 following a scan of each of the benefit computer systems. It is likely that a small number of additional payments will also have been made where entitlement was identified locally due to the eligible pensioner's details not being held on the computer system at the time the scans were done. This information is provisional and may be subject to change.

Information relating to all other pensioners who received payments of £20 or £10 could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

Benefit Integrity Project

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were, for each relevant year to date, the numbers of people dealt with by the benefit integrity project at the Bolton office for (a) disability living allowance and (b) incapacity benefit, and the outcomes in terms of retention of or loss of benefit. [38426]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project aims to ensure that those in receipt of Disability Living Allowance are entitled to it. While it is right to check that people are receiving the correct amount of benefit, we are determined that those checks should be undertaken as sensitively as possible. We also must ensure that all decisions taken as a result of the project are right. We have, therefore, acted to introduce an extra safeguard to improve the quality of, and the confidence in, benefit decisions made by the Project.

The administration of the Benefit Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Brian Iddon, dated 21 April 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what were, for each relevant year to date, the numbers of people dealt with by the Benefit Integrity Project at the Bolton office for (a) Disability Living Allowance and (b) Incapacity Benefit, and the outcomes in terms of retention of or loss of benefit.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) is a programme of postal enquiries and home visits to seek up to date information about the care and mobility needs of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) customers receiving the higher rate mobility component with either the middle or highest rate care component. The BIP does not affect any benefit other than DLA.

DLA is administered centrally at the Disability Benefits Unit in Blackpool and eleven regional Disability Benefit Centres. As at 31 January 1998, a total of 54,839 cases have been examined as part of the BIP. Of these 1,299 people have had their benefit increased, 42,730 have remained unchanged, 6,884 have had their benefit reduced and 3,926 have had their benefit stopped. The total includes 10,811 renewal cases: of which 334 had their benefit increased, 5,601 remain unchanged, 2,907 have had their benefit reduced and 1,969 have had their benefit stopped.

District Offices (DOs) administer Incapacity Benefit (IB) along with a range of other benefits. The current live load of IB cases at Bolton DO is 13,156. In addition to this there are 5,199 credit only cases, where the customer receives National Insurance Credits but no IB.

I hope that this is helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Criminal Court

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that the international criminal court is independent of Governments. [39239]

Mr. Fatchett: It is our policy that the International Criminal Court should conduct its business without interference by states. States parties to the treaty establishing the Court will however be given certain powers, such as the role of electing the judges and the power to refer situations to the Prosecutor for investigation. They will also have an obligation to co-operate in assisting the Court in such matters as the provision of evidence and the transfer of suspects. We also support proposals to give the Security Council a limited role, consistent with its responsibility for maintaining international peace and security.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the establishment of an international criminal court. [39238]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received many representations, from MPs, NGOs and others, about the establishment of the International Criminal Court.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with fellow members of the United Nations Security Council regarding the creation of an international criminal court. [39241]

Mr. Fatchett: Officials in the FCO and in other departments with an interest in the International Criminal Court have had contacts with their counterparts in many other countries, both those which are members of the Security Council and those which are not, on this subject.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy that the proposed international criminal court should have the authority to indict individuals without the threat of a national veto. [39237]

Mr. Fatchett: It is our policy that States Parties to the treaty establishing the International Criminal Court should not have a right of national veto over a prosecution. We are still considering in what circumstances a state with a direct interest in a case but which is not party to the treaty establishing the Court should have to give its consent before a prosecution can take place.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the United States of America and (b) the European Union concerning the proposed international criminal court. [39240]

Mr. Fatchett: Officials from the FCO and other departments with an interest in the International Criminal Court keep in close touch with their counterparts in the Government of the United States of America. There has been EU co-ordination at the meetings of the Preparatory Committee on the Court, and the FCO hosted a two-day meeting of EU experts on the Court in February. During the remainder of our Presidency of the EU we shall continue to co-ordinate the views of EU partners on the Court, so far as it is possible to do so.

Electro-shock Weapons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) of 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 65–66, what action has been taken to encourage EU member states to ban the export of electro-shock weapons, with particular reference to batons. [39266]

Mr. Fatchett: We have had discussions with EU partners, including gathering information on their own controls in this area. We will continue to work to fulfil the commitment given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to monitor whether British companies are manufacturing electro-shock equipment in other countries to export them to third countries. [39228]

Mr. Fatchett: There is no monitoring mechanism at present. We have no information that British companies are manufacturing electro-shock equipment in other countries to export them to third countries. If we were to obtain information that this was happening, we would investigate fully.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department established the voluntary vetting scheme to prevent the transfer of technology related to weapons of mass destruction in the higher education sector; and if his Department compiles an annual report on the operation of this scheme. [38964]

Mr. Fatchett: The Voluntary Vetting Scheme was announced in Parliament through a Written Parliamentary Question on 19 July 1994, Official Report, column 137, and took effect in October 1994.

This Department does not compile an annual report on the operation of the scheme.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent actions the Government have taken to improve the security of nuclear materials in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. [39495]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the House today to the Private Notice Question asked by the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan).

Consumer Training

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to paragraph 7.2(3) of COM (97) 684, what is his Department's policy towards the funding of the promotion of the education and training of consumers in schools. [37001]

Ms Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

Consumer education is not a discrete subject of the National Curriculum. However, education about consumer issues is covered by the National Curriculum which all maintained schools are required to deliver to all pupils aged 5 to 16. There is scope for addressing consumer issues within most of the subjects of the National Curriculum. However, most relevant issues will normally be covered by National Curriculum design and technology, which covers much of traditional Home Economics, as well as, in particular, geography and mathematics. There would also be scope for covering the area in a schools programme of personal, social and health education.

It is not the Government's policy to legislate on what form of education or training people must follow after leaving compulsory schooling. There are nonetheless ample opportunities for people to pursue such education or training post-16.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan; [36640]

(2) what date she plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36659]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". My Department is considering how to respond to its recommendations.

Seagate Technology

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the religious composition of (a) the work force in the Seagate Technology factories in Limavady and Londonderry and (b) residents in the travel-to-work area in which each Seagate Technology factory is located. [38199]

Mr. Ingram: (a) The composition of the workforce in the Seagate Technology factories in Limavady and Londonderry in October 1997 was:

	Composition
Protestant	360 (25.5%)
Roman Catholic	1,051 (74.5%)
Non-Determined	37
Total	1,448

(b) Seagate's Londonderry plant is located within the Derry City Council area. While the majority of workers are drawn from the Council areas in which the plants are located, both plants also draw some workers from a wider area.

According to the 1991 population Census the Protestant and Roman Catholic proportions of the economically active and unemployed populations in these Council areas were as follows:

Percentage

		Protestant	Roman Catholic
Derry	Economically Active	28.2	71.8
	Unemployed	16.6	83.4
Limavady	Economically Active	47.1	52.9
	Unemployed	32.1	67.9

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the costs of (a) anti-drugs education initiatives and (b) other drugs reduction initiatives in each of the past 14 years; and what is the expected cost of similar campaigns in each of the next five years. [38357]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 April 1998]: It is not possible to provide information on expenditure on anti-drugs education and other drug reduction initiatives in each of the last 14 years. This information is aggregated with other activities, in particular alcohol and tobacco, but also personal health issues.

A three year campaign aimed at addressing drug issues will come to an end in March 1999. £500,000 was made directly available each year to support that campaign.

The strategy for tackling drugs in Northern Ireland will be reviewed over the next few months and decisions about future expenditure will be made following the completion of that review.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much her Department has spent on developing vaccines to prevent bovine tuberculosis since 1985; and how much investment is planned for each of the next five years. [38049]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No expenditure has been incurred on developing vaccines to prevent bovine tuberculosis. No investment is planned.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many badgers were trapped under the tuberculosis control scheme in each year since 1985 by (a) snares and (b) cage traps; and if she will indicate the number of animals which suffered injuries in (a) and (b). [38052]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost of the proposed badger culling experiment broken down to show each constituent element for (a) 1998 and (b) each subsequent year of the proposed experiment. [38050]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Nil. Northern Ireland is not involved in the proposed badger culling experiment.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what records are maintained of the number of non-target species caught in snares set for badgers under the tuberculosis control scheme. [38051]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None.

Lawyers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will take steps to increase public awareness of (a) the UN Draft Principles on the Role of Lawyers approved by the 8th UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders and (b) paragraph 5.13 of the Concluding Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Human Dimension of the CSCE agreed in June 1990. [38907]

Mr. Ingram: UK law fully respects and takes into account UN Basic Principles such as those mentioned in the question. The United Kingdom is also participating in discussions in the Council of Europe concerning freedom to exercise the profession of lawyer. These discussions cover, amongst other things, the right of access to lawyers, freedom from harassment and the need for lawyers to act in accordance with professional standards.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will instigate an independent investigation into the extent of threats to legal counsel in Northern Ireland; and what protection is made available to solicitors and barristers who are threatened in connection with their professional duties. [38909]

Mr. Ingram: If threats are made to legal counsel they should be reported to the RUC for investigation. There are no proposals to have an independent inquiry. The duty that the police have to protect people and property is available to solicitors and barristers, and is the same as to all citizens in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will request the RUC, Law Society and Bar Council to organise joint training seminars for police officers on the role of defence lawyers in the administration of justice. [38910]

Mr. Ingram: The Chief Constable has been in contact with the Law Society seeking their involvement in RUC detective training courses.

Holding Centres

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the date on which video and audio-recording equipment will be installed and fully operational in each of the holding centres. [38911]

Mr. Ingram: Silent video recording of police interviews with terrorist suspects became fully operational from midnight on 10 March 1998 in Castlereagh Holding Centre; and work is at an advanced stage to install equipment in Gough Barracks and RUC Strand Road, Londonderry. Provision to enable audio recording of such interviews has been included in the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1998, which received Royal Assent on 8 April. Audio recording will begin after the necessary draft Code of Practice has been drawn up and approved by both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will consult with the Chief Constable and Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres in order to draw up RUC Guidelines regulating what officers may say to suspects in the course of interrogation about their legal advisers. [38908]

Mr. Ingram: Only the highest standards of police behaviour are acceptable in all contacts with detained persons. The complaints procedure is well publicised and where a complaint is lodged it will be investigated fully.

Guidelines on access to legal advice in the Holding Centres are set out in the statutory Code of Practice for the Detention, Treatment and Questioning of Persons Detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, a copy of which is obtainable from the Library of the House.

Patrick Finucane

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will appoint an independent judicial inquiry to investigate the case of Patrick Finucane. [38912]

Mr. Ingram: The murder of Patrick Finucane is the subject of an ongoing RUC inquiry. Three people have already been charged and convicted with possession of the weapon used to kill Mr. Finucane.

Legal Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will repeal the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 to reinstate the right to silence; and what steps she takes to ensure that the standard for admitting confession evidence conforms to the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order of 1989. [38913]

Mr. Ingram: There are no plans to amend the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988. The Order does not end a defendant's right to remain silent. Rather, it enables a court to draw whatever inferences appear proper when a defendant remains silent in circumstances which clearly call for an explanation.

On the latter point, while the law provides for a lower standard of proof for the admissibility of confession evidence in terrorist cases, that provision is currently under review. In practice, judges apply the higher Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 (PACE) standard. Within this framework, the admissibility of confession evidence is subject to judicial discretion.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to reinstate the right to trial by jury. [38914]

Mr. Ingram: While the Government wish to reinstate jury trial for all offences as soon as circumstances allow, they cannot do so while a serious risk remains of the criminal justice system being undermined, or of defendants not being guaranteed a fair trial. The Government have no current plans to change the mode of trial for terrorist cases heard in the Northern Ireland courts.

DEFENCE

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27765]

Mr. Spellar: The figure for total expenditure on hospitality incurred by my Department from 1 May 1997 to the end of February 1998 is £4.230M.

This figure reflects expenditure by my Department, the establishments and formations of the Armed Forces at home and abroad and non-Trading Fund Agencies. The figures for Trading Fund Agencies and Non Departmental Public Bodies are not held centrally, but are kept separately by these organisations.

Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make statement on the Multi-Role Armoured Vehicle Programme. [38101]

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Multi-Role Armoured Vehicle Programme. [39613]

Mr. George Robertson: I am pleased to announce that, together with Germany and France, we intend to develop and produce a family of armoured utility vehicles to meet the requirements of all three nations. The UK needs these vehicles to replace FV430, Saxon and Combat Vehicle Reconnaissance (Tracked) utility vehicles. We plan to sign a Memorandum of Understanding for the joint programme, known in the UK as the Multi-Role Armoured Vehicle, MRAV, covering development and initial production of a total of 600 vehicles. Subject to the completion of the national approvals processes in Germany and France and the negotiation of satisfactory contract terms and conditions, it is intended to place a contract with Eurokonsortium, a consortium including GKN Defence Ltd. from the UK, Krauss-Maffei/ Wegmann and Mak. from Germany, and GIAT from France.

This programme will be managed within the quadrilateral Organisation for Joint Armament Co-operation, known as OCCAR, and represents a major collaboration with our European allies. Collaboration will bring a number of benefits including improved interoperability and financial savings, through sharing of development costs and economies of scale in production. The project also offers UK industry the opportunity to strengthen its links with the leading companies in the European armoured vehicles industry.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Gulf War veterans have been examined by the Medical Assessment Programme in connection with Gulf War Syndrome; and if he will give a breakdown of the illnesses identified by this programme. [38604]

Dr. Reid: There is no medical or scientific consensus about the nature of the illnesses being suffered by some Gulf veterans or whether there is any commonality between them. The Medical Assessment Programme (MAP) was established by my Department in 1993 with the aim of providing veterans who are concerned about their health following service in the Gulf conflict with a clinical diagnosis of their medical conditions. As at 2 April 1998, 2,285 patients had attended at least one consultation at the Programme and a further 132 had been given appointments and were waiting to be seen. The vast majority of those who have attended the MAP are Gulf veterans themselves. However, where medically appropriate, veterans' partners are also welcome to attend and a small number have done so. In addition, some civilians for whom MOD was responsible during the Gulf conflict have also been seen by the MAP.

A paper analysing the clinical diagnoses of the first 1,000 patients seen by the MAP is close to completion and will shortly be submitted to an external journal for peer review; if accepted, the date of subsequent publication would be a matter for that journal.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is being carried out by his Department to analyse the chemical warfare mental incapacitant Agent 15; where this work is being conducted; and what is the scientific name of Agent 15. [38606]

Dr. Reid: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 9 February 1998, Official Report, columns 3–6, that the Ministry of Defence was considering how best to investigate Agent 15 further. This process continues; we are currently reviewing all available information on this agent and related compounds, with the assistance of CBD Porton Down. No laboratory work is being carried out at present. I expect to make an announcement when this process is complete.

Agent 15 is one of a large group of chemicals known as glycollates (esters of glycollic acid). Its scientific name remains classified for non-proliferation reasons, because it reveals details of the agent's chemical structure and would thus be of value to a country which wished to produce it.

Royal Irish Regiment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the service career in the Royal Irish Regiment of (a) David Keys, (b) Stephen McClean, (c) Noel McCready and (d) Ryan Robley; on what date each joined the Regiment; and what were the circumstances of their discharge. [38904]

Dr. Reid: My Department has no record of David Keys having served with the Ulster Defence Regiment or the Royal Irish Regiment.

Ex Private Stephen McClean was enlisted into the Ulster Defence Regiment (part time) on 17 July 1988. He was subsequently enlisted into the full-time element of the Regiment on 1 January 1989. The Ulster Defence Regiment and the Royal Irish Rangers were then amalgamated in 1992 to form the Royal Irish Regiment. Stephen McClean was discharged on 22 September 1993 under the authority of the Ulster Defence Regiment Regulation Paragraph 5.075 (which were still extant) as his services were no longer required.

Ex Private Noel McCready was enlisted into the Ulster Defence Regiment (part time) on 11 January 1989 and then into the full-time element on 1 February 1989. He was discharged on 9 April 1990 under the Ulster Defence Regiment Regulations Paragraph 5.082.

Ex Private Ryan Robley joined the Ulster Defence Regiment (part time) on 15 October 1987, transferring to the full-time element on 6 March 1988. He was discharged from the Royal Irish Regiment on 14 July 1994 on completion of his engagement (Ulster Defence Regiment Regulations Paragraph 5.070).

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 22 April. [38039]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. I will have further such meetings later today.

WALES

National Assembly

8. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the concordats between the national assembly and UK Government Departments. [38006]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have received a number of representations about concordats since the White Paper was published.

Concordats are intended to preserve the good working relationships that exist between my Department and Whitehall so that the work of the Assembly will be conducted effectively. My officials are currently discussing concordats with other departments and as I have told the House previously, the drafts will be published when they are ready although I do not expect them to be available until after the Government of Wales Bill has completed its passage through Parliament.

21. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the site of the National Assembly for Wales from people in north Wales. [38022]

Mr. Ron Davies: On 3 February, in response to a question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams), I placed in the Library of the House a list of all those who responded during the public consultation exercise.

Child Care

9. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce a child care strategy in Wales. [38007]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We hope to publish a strategy soon.

Council Tax

10. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on council tax discounts in Wales. [38008]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Local authorities estimate that 34 per cent. of persons liable for council tax will qualify for discounts in 1998-99.

New Deal

11. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the new deal in Wales. [38009]

Mr. Hain: Excellent progress is being made in implementing the New Deal for young people in the South-West Wales Pathfinder area. Three hundred and fifty employers have signed New Deal agreements, pledging over 1,500 jobs.

17. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new jobs he plans to fund under the new deal in Wales. [38016]

Mr. Hain: Funding for the New Deal in Wales is provided by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. Of those entering a New Deal option, 45 per cent. are expected to go into a subsidised job. As the programme is demand led, no numerical targets have been set.

European Regional Funds

12. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the future of European regional funds for Wales. [38010]

Mr. Hain: We have received many representations, both from hon. Members and from representatives of the wider partnership.

Minimum Wage

13. Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Welsh businesses regarding a minimum wage. [38011]

Mr. Hain: Since 1 May last year, the Welsh Office has received 14 representations on the National Minimum Wage. Of these, one was from an individual business, 7 were from umbrella organisations and the remainder were from members of the public.

Public Transport

14. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the allocation of extra resources to public transport. [38013]

Mr. Hain: Later in the spring the Government will publish a UK Transport White Paper, together with a complementary transport policy statement for Wales. These documents will set out our integrated transport policy as well as how we intend to ensure that public expenditure on transport is directed towards meeting our policy objectives, including the promotion of public transport.

Inward Investment

15. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of inward investment attracted to Wales since 1 May 1997. [38014]

Mr. Ron Davies: From 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998 the Welsh Development Agency has recorded 114 inward investment projects forecasting 12,114 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment of over £632 million. I am confident that Wales will maintain its excellent record of inward investment.

NHS Trusts (Gwent)

16. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on NHS trust reconfiguration in Gwent. [38015]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I announced on 30 March that my right hon. Friend and I wish to consult on the creation of a new single NHS Trust in Gwent. Consultation on this, and our other proposals for the reconfiguration of NHS trusts in Wales, will take place over the summer.

Manufacturing Industry

18. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the prospects for manufacturing industry output in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [38019]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh office has made no such assessment.

Common Agricultural Policy

19. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on reform of the common agricultural policy and its impact on Wales. [38020]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The European Commission has now published its proposals and the Government have given them a broad welcome. I attended the Agriculture Council meeting on 31 March at which the proposals were discussed. These discussions will continue and we will continue to work closely with farming unions in Wales to identify and argue for the needs of Welsh agriculture as the process goes forward.

Gwent Tertiary College

20. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the composition and record of the corporation of Gwent tertiary college. [38021]

Mr. Hain: Gwent Tertiary College Further Education Corporation comprises:

Mr. Chris Hughes: Chairman of Governors
Mr. Brian Bird: Vice Chairman, Independent member
Mr. Anthony Atherton: Independent member
Mr. Philip Curzon: Independent member
Mr. John Davidson: Independent member
Mr. Tudor Griffiths: Independent member
Mr. David Mason: Principal
Mr. David Jones: Independent member
Cllr. Mrs. Anita Lloyd: Co-opted member
Mr. Tom Mulcahy: Independent member
Ms Heulwen Pritchard: Independent member
Mrs. Anne Ransome: Staff member
Mr. John Rogers: Staff member
Mrs. Kate Walker: Independent member
Mr. Shaun Walters: Independent member
Mr. Neville Waters: Independent member
Mr. Malcolm Cox: Student member.

24. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the number of inquiries currently being conducted into the running of Gwent tertiary college. [38026]

Mr. Hain: There are currently three external inquires underway at Gwent Tertiary College. These are being conducted by the National Audit Office, the Welsh Funding Councils' Audit Service, and the European Court of Auditors together with the Verification and Audit Section of the Department for Education and Employment. In addition, Ernst and Young, the College's internal auditors, are conducting an audit.

Homelessness

22. Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the problem of street homelessness in Wales. [38023]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We are committed to ensuring that no-one needs to sleep rough in Wales. I will consider the information provided by local authorities in their Housing Strategy and Operational Plans for 1998–99 before deciding what more needs to be done to achieve this objective.

European Structural Funds

23. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the renegotiation of the European structural funds. [38024]

Mr. Hain: Since Welsh GDP per capita is extremely low by comparison with both the EU and GB average, the Government believe that Wales is entitled to secure the maximum benefit from the Structural Funds after 1999.

Local Authority Capping

26. Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding Government proposals to lift local authority capping. [38028]

Mr. Win Griffiths: As part of the process of modernising local government, we are consulting on a range of issues to bring government back to the people of Wales. A consultation paper seeking views on options for strengthening local government finance and accountability will be published shortly. This will include options for how an end to crude and universal capping might be brought about.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the scope for revision of his proposals for the reconfiguration of the health trusts in Wales following the consultation process. [38027]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Final decisions on a new configuration of NHS trust in Wales will be taken only when all the responses to the public consultation exercise have been considered.

Sheepmeat Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the Welsh sheepmeat industry. [39277]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Slaughtering of lambs to date in 1998 has been significantly higher than last year due to farmers holding lambs back which would normally have been sold earlier. Low producer returns were a major factor. The high volume and in many cases the poor quality of animals marketed have depressed prices paid to producers. The Government's recent decision to introduce private storage aid for the sheepmeat sector in the UK should help to bolster prices and improve short term returns to producers.

Latest agriculture census figures show an increase in the breeding ewe population in the UK. This is expected to lead to a 12 per cent. increase in lamb production in 1998. As a result, supplies of sheepmeat are forecast to increase by 4 per cent. in 1998 in the UK. This is likely to continue to put pressure on producer prices throughout the year. However, the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC) expect a return to a more orderly supply in the Autumn; this should improve matters although prices are not expected to attain the levels of two years ago.

On a more positive note, the latest available MLC data indicate a 10 per cent. increase in household lamb purchases in February compared to last year.

The Welsh Office, through its funding of Welsh Food Promotions, will continue to ensure that efforts are maintained to promote and market Welsh lamb at home and abroad. Given the general over supply in the market and the strong pound, it will be important to emphasise the farm-assured quality and wholesome image of Welsh lamb in order to stimulate demand.

Dairy Imports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the amount of (i) milk and (ii) associated dairy products imported into (a) Wales and (b) the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [39276]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information for the UK in 1997 is given as follows. Separate figures for Wales are not available.

	Tonnes	Value (£000)
Milk Products
Whole milk	63,305	19,365
Powdered milk	23,635	38,516
Skimmed milk	90,221	27,714
Buttermilk	13,928	13,883
Condensed milk	13,190	11,672
Total	204,279	111,150
Dairy Products
Butter	109,613	214,869
Cheese	231,925	571,623
Cream	11,304	13,962
Ice Cream	45,539	79,512
Whey	25,572	15,053
Yoghurt	70,996	62,559
Other	3,439	4,202
Total	498,388	961,780
Grand Total	702,666	1,072,930

The data for 1997 are provisional and subject to amendment. The above data include an estimate of below threshold trade, but exclude an estimate for non-response.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the dairy industry in Wales. [39274]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Although my right hon. Friend and I have received numerous representations regarding the problems in the beef and sheep sectors since January this year, some of which also mentioned milk prices, we have received only 10 written representations referring specifically to the dairy sector.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of non-farming jobs dependent upon the dairy industry in Wales. [39275]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Welsh Office does not make such estimates. However, the Welsh Institute of Rural Studies, Aberystwyth published a report on 20 April on "LFA Policy in Wales: A Review of the Socio-Economic and Environmental Effects of the HLCA Scheme" sponsored by the Welsh Office which provides such estimates. It states that using 1991 estimates for the milk production sector for every on farm job there are 0.25 jobs in other industries in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions he has discussed the dairy industry with leaders of the farming unions. [39272]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I and my right hon. Friend have met representatives of the farming unions regularly to discuss matters of common interest, including the dairy industry, and will continue to do so.

National Orchestra of Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways and by what amounts he has assisted the National Orchestra of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [39429]

Mr. Ron Davies: Welsh Office support for the arts is channelled through the Arts Council of Wales. In 1998–99 the Arts Council's grant to the BBC National Orchestra of Wales is £609,875.

National Lottery (Cricket Clubs)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Sports Lottery Distribution Board concerning applications by local cricket clubs; and if he will make a statement. [39432]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have had no such discussions with SPORTLOT—the Lottery Sports Fund for Wales administered by the Sports Council for Wales. The Sports Council considers applications from a wide range of sports and decisions on those applications are taken entirely independently of Government.

Since it began distributing Lottery funds in 1995, the Sports Council has awarded £1.8 million to 38 local cricket schemes throughout Wales.

Health and Social Services Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the increase in expenditure on (a) health and (b) social services between 1996–97 and 1998–99. [38025]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Central Government's own expenditure and the hypothecated resources made available to local authorities for expenditure on health and personal social services in 1996–97 was £2,307,381,000. Planned provision in 1998–99 is £2,486,838,000. About 99% of this expenditure relates to provision for the National Health Service.

The bulk of social services expenditure by local authorities is financed by resources from the Department, which are not hypothecated to specific services, and revenue raised locally. Local authorities have not yet supplied details of their planned expenditure on services for 1998–99.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support is available to mature students on access courses to higher education; and what plans he has to alter the current arrangements. [39148]

Dr. Howells: All mature students can apply to their LEAs for discretionary awards and to their colleges for financial support. Some students may receive additional help through fee remission and free child care.

The current system of post-16 LEA discretionary awards fails many students. We have therefore introduced legislation to abolish them and have asked an advisory group chaired by Graham Lane to develop recommendations for fairer, more effective replacement arrangements. We plan to consult on the Group's recommendations in May.

Sir Geoffrey JohnsonSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide comparative calculations of the expected debt on graduation of a student entering an undergraduate course in the autumn of 1999 under (a) the Government's proposals and (b) the Dearing Committee's proposals, assuming receipt of a full maintenance grant. [38737]

Dr. Howells: The maximum amount that a student can borrow will depend on the length of the course and the place of study, as well as the student's and his or her parents' or spouse's income. Under the Government's proposals, a student completing a three year course outside London which began in 1999 and who took out the full loan available each year might expect to have borrowed a total of £10,165 in 1998 prices. The comparable figure under the Dearing Committee's proposals would be £8,083.

Repayments under our proposed system will be made only when a graduate's income exceeds £10,000 a year and the level of repayments will then be linked directly to the individual's income above that amount. A graduate with an income of £17,000 per annum, for example, would make weekly repayments of about £12 a week.

Students and their families will be expected to contribute no more up front to the costs of their higher education under our proposals than they would under the current arrangements. Our proposals will ensure that students have access to the funds which they need while they are studying while generating substantial additional resources for investment in higher and further education.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of exempting all students who have been accepted to Scottish universities from England, Wales and Northern Ireland for the fourth year of their tuition fees. [39200]

Dr. Howells: We estimate that the cost of exempting students from England from contributing towards the fourth year of their tuition fees for first degree courses at Scottish universities would be some £1.5 million per annum.

The cost of exempting students from Wales and Northern Ireland is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will change the regulations which require that a person under the age of 25 be married at least two years before he or she can be deemed independent of his or her parents for grant or loan related purposes. [39018]

Dr. Howells: We have no plans to change this regulation for the academic year 1998/99. But we will be reviewing the means-testing arrangements for 1999/2000.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow mature students attending higher education institutions on undergraduate courses to access (a) grants and (b) loans in 1998 and 1999. [39023]

Dr. Howells: Students entering full-time undergraduate courses in 1998/99 will have access to maintenance grants for one year only at a reduced rate, regardless of their age. Increased loans will also be available to students aged under 50 at the start of their courses.

While we have no plans to extend the eligibility for loans to those aged 50 and over for 1998/99, we intend to review the eligibility requirements for 1999/2000 and subsequent years when grants will no longer be available. The recent consultation paper on lifelong learning, "The Learning Age," invited views on extending loans to those in their early 50s who wish to enter higher education, for example, to retrain following redundancy. Final decisions will be taken in the light of the responses to that consultation.

Under the new arrangements all students, irrespective of their age, will be eligible to receive means-related help towards their contribution to tuition costs.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow mature students attending higher education courses who are in receipt of income support to retain their full benefit entitlement and access the full income contingent loan. [39024]

Dr. Howells: The Government have no plans to change the way student loans are treated in assessing eligibility for benefits. The student loan is a normal means of funding students and although repayable, it is still real income intended to support students in higher education. It would be wrong to treat students who do have access to benefits more favourably than others by ignoring the availability of this source of income. Mature students aged 50 or over at the start of their course are currently ineligible for loans and therefore no account is taken of this form of income when assessing their entitlement to benefit.

Autism

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from parents of autistic children relating to the provision of special education; and what response he has made. [38925]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is for schools and local education authorities to arrange suitable special educational provision for children with autistic spectrum disorders, whether in specialist autism schools, other special schools, autism units at mainstream schools or in mainstream classes with support. The Department receives representations from parents about individual cases and from autism organisations about autism provision in general. There was broad support for the proposal in the special educational needs Green Paper for regional planning to develop specialist provision and research to establish best practice. In the light of a review commissioned by the Department and work to be undertaken for the Local Government Association, we will consider what further guidance to offer on how best to meet the needs of children with a broad range of autistic disorders.

Universities and Colleges

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information his Department collates on the resources of United Kingdom universities and colleges. [38879]

Dr. Howells: The Department does not itself collate any information on the resources of universities and colleges. However the Higher Education Funding Council for England collates information on the resources and financial health of universities and colleges in England from copies of their annual audited financial statements and from other returns which are provided to it on a strictly confidential basis. The Council publishes summary information for the sector as a whole periodically.

Information on institutions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Literacy Strategy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if officials from his Department were involved in drafting the literacy strategy document recently circulated to schools. [39152]

Mr. Byers: Yes. Officials drafted the document, taking advice from various sources, including Ofsted, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and the Teacher Training Agency.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 April 1998, Official Report, column 227, on the Literacy Task Force, when it published the results of its study on the literacy strategy; and if it is currently providing advice to his Department. [39203]

Mr. Byers: The Literacy Task Force met for the last time in July 1997, and published its final report in August 1997.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the combined budgets for TECs in England for 1998–99. [39003]

Dr. Howells: The total DfEE TEC budget provision for 1998–99 is £1,304 million.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the 1998–99 budget for each TEC in the North West in the geographical area within which the North West Regional Development Agency will operate; and what is the total of these budgets. [39004]

Dr. Howells: Information relating to individual TEC budgets will not be available until contract negotiations between TECs and their providers have been completed. This is expected to be around October.

The total 1998–99 budgets for the TECs in the geographical area within which North West Regional Development agency will operate is £219,492,210.

Access Courses

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow mature students on access courses in colleges of further education to continue to receive jobseeker's allowance whilst attending access courses. [39027]

Mr. Alan Howarth: For those aged 18–24, unemployed 6 months or more, there is an option under the New Deal to study full-time for up to 12 months. Study may be on access courses. These people will receive an allowance rather than Jobseeker's Allowance.

For those aged 25 and over, unemployed 2 years or more, there will be an opportunity to study full-time for up to a year on the New Deal while remaining on Jobseeker's Allowance. Study may be on access courses.

For those receiving Jobseeker's Allowance who do not fall into the above New Deal groups or for those in scope of the 25 and over New Deal who do not wish to take up full-time study, the existing Jobseeker's Allowance legislation will continue to apply. The Jobseeker's Allowance rules allow study part-time while receiving Jobseeker's Allowance.

We will review the Jobseeker's Allowance rules on education and training in the light of experience of the Jobseeker's Allowance Workskill pilots and early experience of our welfare to work programme.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for each of the years 1988–89 to 1998–99, what has been the overall percentage annual increase in standard teachers' pay after the staging of awards has been taken into consideration. [39025]

Mr. Byers: Teachers' pay settlements have been as follows:

Year	Percentage increase
1988–89	4.75
1989–90	7.5
1990–91	9.3
1991–92	11.3
1992–93	7.8
1993–94	1.5
1994–95	2.9
1995–96	2.7
1996–97	3.75
1997–98	3.3
1998–99	3.8

Teachers' Pensions

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for each of the years 1988–89 to 1998–99, what has been the overall annual percentage increase in the teachers' pension award. [39026]

Dr. Howells: Public service pensions are increased under the annual Pensions Increase Orders. The annual percentage increases are given in the following table:

Effective date	Percentage increase
11 April 1988	4.2
10 April 1989	5.9

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will meet the proposals for additional funding of higher education proposed by the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education for each of the years 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [39147]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Welsh) on 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 200.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will introduce measures to prevent further and higher education institutions that receive the majority of their income from public funds from unilaterally downgrading staff to reduce budgets; [39019]

(2) what plans he has to introduce measures to prevent the use of waiver clauses which remove the rights of employees to redundancy or unfair dismissal claims, in the contracts of academic staff at publicly funded FE and HE institutions. [39020]

Dr. Howells: Further and Higher Education Institutions are independent bodies. It is therefore for each institution to take decisions on internal organisation and management including the grading of staff and the form of their contracts. We do, however, expect institutions to work in partnership with their employees: as my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has made clear in "The Learning Age", a confrontational management style is not acceptable in publicly funded bodies.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage a reduction in the incidence of leg problems in broiler chickens; and if he will make a statement. [37775]

Mr. Morley: Improving the leg health of broiler chickens is an important aim of the MAFF funded animal welfare research programme. Results have already demonstrated the beneficial effects of certain feeding and lighting programmes and these are now being promoted to the industry. Good litter management is also important to leg health and is the subject of an ongoing advisory campaign carried out by ADAS on our behalf.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will request the European Commission to instruct its Scientific Committee on Animal Health and Animal Welfare to prepare a report on the welfare of intensively-kept broiler chickens; and if he will make a statement. [37773]

Mr. Morley: I understand the EU Commission has already put action in hand. We will be following developments with interest.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to bring to an end the use of catching practices which cause injuries and stress to broiler chickens; and if he will make a statement. [37776]

Mr. Morley: The current welfare code for domestic fowl reminds farmers of the need to take care to avoid injuring birds or causing them to panic during handling and catching. Failure to observe these and other provisions of this code may be used as evidence in proceedings under Section 1 of the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 which makes it an offence to cause or allow livestock on agricultural land to suffer unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will implement the recommendation made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in 1992 on the treatment of broiler chickens with physical conditions which limit their ability to reach food or water; and if he will make a statement. [37778]

Mr. Morley: Failure to take appropriate action to treat broiler chickens with physical conditions which limit their ability to reach food or water would give rise to offences under existing legislation which requires that livestock on agricultural land are protected from unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that broiler breeders are given sufficient food; and if he will make a statement. [37777]

Mr. Morley: The Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994 (Statutory Instrument 1994/2126) already require that all livestock (including poultry) are fed a wholesome diet which is appropriate to their species and which is fed to them in sufficient quantity to maintain them in good health and to satisfy their nutritional needs. The Farm Animal Welfare Council is currently reviewing all aspects of the welfare of broiler breeders including current feeding regimes and will report later this year. I shall examine their recommendations carefully before deciding whether further action needs to be taken.

Fisheries Restructuring

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EU fisheries restructuring and modernisation funds will be available to the United Kingdom once agreed United Kingdom fleet reductions have been achieved. [37566]

Mr. Morley: EU funds for structural assistance in the fisheries sector are administered under Council Regulation EC No. 3699/93, which required Member States to submit Sectoral Plans setting out detailed programmes of aid taking account of the provisions of their Multi-Annual Guidance Programmes (MAGP) for improving the balance between catching capacity and available stocks. Regulation 3699/93 does not, however, allow the granting of any aid for vessel construction which does not comply with a Member State's global, intermediate MAGP objectives and its final objectives by segment within the stated time limits. Aid for any modernisation likely to result in an increase in fishing effort is similarly precluded.

Because of the extent of the fleet reductions required to meet UK MAGP III targets, the Sectoral Plan submitted by the previous administration in March 1994, copies of which are available in the Library of the House, gave priority to expenditure on decommissioning and vessel safety grants. Some £14.8 million remains under these headings in the current programming period, which ends on 31 December 1999, subject to the required nationally funded contributions being available to draw down these EU funds. But the previous administration made no provision for UK expenditure to comply with MAGP targets after the end of the 1997–98 financial year.

The question of what EU aid might be available for other restructuring and modernisation measures once fleet reduction targets have been achieved accordingly depends both on any necessary further expenditure towards meeting those targets and on new resources being found in UK national spending plans, which are still in the process of being examined in the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. Entitlement to such aid would not, however, be automatic, but would require revisions to the UK's Sectoral Plan which the Government would propose only if they considered such measures justified in the circumstances then prevailing.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his timescale for the introduction of an early retirement scheme for farmers; [37954]

(2) what plans he has to link the proposed early retirement scheme for farmers with measures to assist young people to enter the industry. [37953]

Mr. Morley: Responses to the consultation document issued on the principle of whether or not to introduce an early retirement scheme or other measures have been requested by 30 April. If the Government decide, in the light of these responses, to introduce such a scheme prior approval must be sought from the European Commission. The Commission could take up to six months to grant such approval. Any scheme is therefore unlikely to be introduced before the end of 1998.

The Government will consider carefully any representations that an early retirement scheme should be linked to measures to assist young people to enter farming.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what ruling the European Court of Justice has made concerning the Order of the President of the European Court of Justice, Case 246/89R-Commission v. the United Kingdom, Paragraph 26, at page 3132. [38193]

Mr. Morley: The European Court of Justice confirmed in case C 246/89 that the UK had complied with the President's interim order (Case C 246/89R) to suspend the application of the nationality requirements enshrined in the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 with effect from 2 November 1989. The Court made no specific reference to paragraph 26 of the President's order.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will reply to the letters written by Prowse Thomas (Solicitors), of Brixham, on behalf of trawler owners Captain P. D. and Mrs. J. W. McLeod, to his Department on the 5, 17 and 22 December 1997, 9 and 17 January 1998, and 13 and 23 February 1998; what the reasons are for the delay; and for what reasons he has refused to grant dispensation, relating to the trawler Van Dijck. [38384]

Mr. Morley: I understand that Ministry officials have been in correspondence with Prowse Thomas and that the matter has now been concluded.

Live Animal Exports

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of arrangements for enforcing the rules on the welfare of animals exported live to the Continent to be completed. [38801]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) on 18 November 1997, Official Report, columns 116–17. Our detailed proposals will be issued shortly for public consultation.

Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of salmon and freshwater fisheries to be completed. [38789]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 234–35.

Fishing Vessel Licensing

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of fishing vessel licensing to be completed. [38802]

Mr. Morley: The review of fishing vessel licensing has yet to commence but I would expect the review to be completed by the end of 1998.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason the EU questionnaire on the future of the Common Fisheries Policy was not addressed to member states' Governments. [39261]

Mr. Morley: The questionnaire was issued by the European Commission. Determining the addressees was a matter for the Commission.

Harwich Harbour

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the dumping at sea off the Essex coast of material dredged from Harwich harbour; [38943]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effects of the dumping at sea of material from the dredging of Harwich harbour on (a) the marine environment, (b) coastal fisheries and (c) lobster fisheries off the coast of Essex. [38944]

Mr. Morley: A site known as Rough Towers, some 15 kilometres south-east of Harwich, has been used for disposal of dredgings from a number of ports including Felixstowe, Harwich and Ipswich for many years.

Monitoring at this disposal site has been, and will continue to be, carried out by the Ministry's scientists at the Centre for the Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science as well as by Harwich Haven Authority. Inevitably, disposal of large quantities of dredgings has had a localised effect at the site itself but there is also some evidence that fine sediments from the disposal of maintenance material have dispersed from the site. Fishermen have expressed concern that the deposit of fine sediment has altered adjacent crustacea fishing grounds.

Harwich Haven Authority has applied for licences under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to dispose of dredged material arising from the deepening of the approach channel serving the Ports of Felixstowe and Harwich. A detailed assessment is currently being made of the applications and of the accompanying Environmental Statement, paying particular regard to the potential impact upon the marine environment and crustacea fisheries. Harwich Haven Authority, in consultation with the Ministry, are investigating a possible new disposal site further offshore to accommodate silty maintenance dredgings.

The Ministry requires particular emphasis to be given to the search for alternatives to sea disposal for dredged material. In conjunction with the Environment Agency, English Nature and local authorities, several areas have been identified where the material may be used beneficially to enhance marine and inter-tidal habitats and for coastal defence works, thus minimising the quantity to be disposed of to sea.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 20 to 21 April; and if he will make a statement. [39558]

Dr. John Cunningham: I chaired the fifth meeting under the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Union Council of Agriculture Ministers on 20–21 April in Luxembourg. My noble Friend, Lord Donoughue, The Parliamentary Secretary responsible for the farming and food industry, represented the United Kingdom.

The principal items for discussion at the Council were Commission proposals on amendments to the EU banana, tobacco and olive oil market regimes; and its proposals in respect of common agricultural policy (CAP) prices for the 1998–99 marketing year. The Council marked an important step forward in the negotiations on all of these. On bananas, I was able to conclude that the Council would work towards an agreement in June on the basis of the Commission's proposal for changes to the EU banana regime to bring it into line with the ruling of the WTO appellate body. I was also able to conclude, in relation to both tobacco and olive oil, that intensive work would continue at expert level in the light of the guidance given by the Council, with the aim of reaching early conclusions on these proposals if possible. The Council also recognised the importance of concluding the CAP price-fixing negotiation under the UK Presidency in June, and I undertook as Council Chairman to work to achieve that outcome.

The Council adopted by qualified majority (Germany opposing) a proposal from the Commission extending until 31 December 1998 temporary rules on agri-monetary compensation and the freezing of green rates, but with tighter rules to reduce the risk of over-compensation.

At the request of the Dutch Agriculture Minister, I held a debate on a Dutch memorandum on the use of marker vaccines in combating classical swine fever. A number of delegations expressed support for Dutch proposals, whilst others expressed some reservations. All were mindful of the need to examine this issue against the background of what would be acceptable to the EU's international trading partners. I concluded that the Commission should continue its scientific work on this issue as a matter of urgency.

The Council held a short discussion, at the request of the French Minister, on proposed EU free trade agreements with Chile and the Mercosur countries. I undertook as Chairman of the Agriculture Council to report the views of Agriculture Ministers to the General Affairs Council where these agreements are being negotiated.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Waste Disposal

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what volume of non-inert waste was disposed of by each local authority in the North West in each of the last three years; and what estimate he has made of the volumes to be disposed of in 1998–99. [38469]

Angela Eagle: The following figures represent Environment Agency site return data for all non-inert waste in tonnes disposed of to landfill within each waste disposal authority in the north west region over the last three years.

The estimate has been made by the Environment Agency on the basis of a 2% growth in the number of households.

Traffic Noise (A13)

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to protect residents in the Canning Town area from increased noise pollution as a result of changes to the A13; [39262]

(2) how much money has been made available for noise insulation for homes in the Canning Town area to protect them from increased traffic flows; [39263]

(3) what are the projected increased noise levels in the Canning Town area as a result of the improvements to the A13; [39264]

(4) how many homes in the Canning Town area will benefit from noise insulation offered by the Highways Agency to protect them against traffic-induced noise. [39265]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Fitzpatrick, dated 23 April 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson has asked me to reply to your recent questions about traffic noise levels arising from the A13 Ironbridge to Canning Town improvement as these are operational issues for the Highways Agency.

No financial limit has been set for providing traffic noise insulation to homes in the area. Offers of noise insulation will be made to all occupiers of dwellings that qualify in accordance with the Noise Insulation Regulations.

We have estimated that up to 650 dwellings will qualify and a list will be published in due course.

Noise levels immediately adjacent to the scheme have been calculated to increase by between 1 and 4 db(A) in 2011 as a result of increased traffic flows and speeds.

However, to mitigate the effects, we are planning to put barriers alongside the new carriageways. 2 metre high barriers, 700 metres long are proposed on the new bridges over the River Lea and the Canning Town Flyover, and a 3 metre high screen, 160 metres long will be provided on the new road adjacent to Portree Street, to protect properties there. The benefits of these barriers for individual properties would depend on the type of property and its location.

Contaminated Land

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress his Department has made in respect of the publication of technical guidance arising out of provisions of the Environment Act 1995 relating to contaminated land. [39354]

Angela Eagle: Various technical reports are being prepared which will be relevant in the operation of local authorities' planning and building regulation functions, as well as in their future operation of the regulatory regime for contaminated land under the Environment Act 1995. These reports cover issues including guideline values for the assessment of the potential threats to human health posed by contaminants and model procedures for the management of contaminated land, from identification of the problem through the selection of the remediation option to assurance that the problem has been successfully dealt with. The Department expects these reports to be ready for publication in the autumn.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets he has set for the Driving Standards Agency. [39489]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The key targets for the Driving Standards Agency are set out in its Business Plan, which include management objectives, performance indicators and key tasks. Copies of the Business Plan have been placed in the Library. The key targets are as follows:

achieve an average annual return on capital employed (ROCE) on statutory activities of 6% of net assets over the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 2002;

increase the weighted average of fees by no more than RPI in each of the three years during the period 1 April 1997 to 1 April 2000 and by no more than RPI minus 1% in each of the following two years; achieve a national average waiting time for car practical tests not exceeding 6 weeks and make appointments available within 10 weeks at 99% of permanent test centres; aim to keep 99.5% of all practical test appointments which are in place 2 days prior to the appointment date; answer practical test booking office telephones so that:

4 and 5 calls will be answered on their first dialling attempt;

90% of calls will be answered by a human voice within 30 seconds after completion of handling by the automatic answering system; and an average of no more than 4% of calls in the queue will be abandoned before being answered; ensure 95% of theory test candidates obtain a test booking at their preferred test centre and test session within 2 weeks of their preferred date; and ensure theory test booking office telephones are answered so that:

incoming lines will not be engaged for more than 30 minutes in any week; and 95% of calls received will be answered by a human voice within 10 seconds after completion of handling by the automatic answering system.

Fire Deaths

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many deaths were caused by fires in buildings in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996; [39294]

(2) how many building fire deaths were caused by toxic smoke and fume inhalation in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996. [39295]

Mr. George Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

The readily available information is given in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Broadcasting

Mrs. Dean: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the progressive lifting of the broadcast entertainment restrictions affecting BT and other public telecommunications operators; and if she will make a statement. [39839]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government have considered the options for fulfilling their commitment carefully, and I am today publishing our conclusions. A copy of the document setting out the Government's approach has been placed in the Library of the House. In summary, we have concluded that:

(i) Public Telecommunications Operators (PTOs) along with all other operators should immediately have the option to compete in the provision of broadcast entertainment to the 17% of UK homes currently outside cable franchise areas;

(ii) PTOs and others should be allowed to compete in the provision of broadcast services, if they so wish, throughout the whole country from 1 January 2001.

We are following through on our commitment. We need to remove the uncertainty, created by the previous Government, over when and how the restrictions they placed on BT and other PTOs might be lifted. It has become increasingly damaging for all operators—including cable. All operators need greater certainty and clarity about the regulatory position as they plan long-term investments for advanced digital services.

We want to restore confidence for all market players and enable the benefits of new technologies to be delivered throughout the country.

We want to encourage competition which will drive down prices, enhance innovation and encourage private sector investment—to the benefit of the consumer—in all areas of the market; in services and in networks. A competitive market in network provision will underpin sustainable competition in services for the long term.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Public Analyst Services

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the review of public analyst services in England and Wales. [39885]

Mr. Rooker: The Government undertook to initiate a review in response to a recommendation in Professor James' report on the Food Standards Agency. I have today announced the terms of reference of the review, which will be undertaken by an independent Review Team under the chairmanship of Mr. Alan Turner, OBE. Interested parties are invited to submit written evidence to the Review Team. I hope the review will be completed before the end of the year.

Fishing Limits

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many square miles of sea there are between (a) the baseline and the six mile limit where the six mile limit applies, (b) the baseline and the 12 mile limit where the 12 mile limit applies and (c) the baseline and the 200 mile limit or the median line where applicable. [38167]

Mr. Morley: Information is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only by means of a survey at disproportionate cost. The Hydrographic Unit of the Ministry of Defence has, however, supplied the following information. The approximate area of sea between the low water line and the 12 mile limit is 49,473 square nautical miles. From the low water line to the 200 mile limit covers an area of approximately 211,130 square nautical miles. Both figures include areas of water inside the baselines.

Fishery Restructuring

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate (a) the proportion of fishing fleet cutbacks required for United Kingdom receipt of EU restructuring funds for the industry which could be achieved through national repurchase of quota hopping vessels and licences and (b) the estimated cost of such repurchases. [37565]

Mr. Morley: A scheme aimed at compulsorily purchasing vessels and licence entitlements owned by non-UK interests would not be permissible under Community law. Nor would it be permissible to prevent any non-UK interests who have previously left the industry from re-investing in the UK fleet. Such a scheme could not therefore be used to help achieve the UK's outstanding fishing fleet reduction targets which, along with levels of non-UK ownership, vary considerably from segment to segment of the fleet. All UK registered fishing vessels have been eligible to apply for decommissioning, regardless of ownership.

Green-top Milk

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make an announcement on the future sale of green-top milk in England. [39260]

Dr. John Cunningham: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 582. We are still taking stock of all the points raised in the consultation and an announcement will be made in due course.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons he has not yet replied to the letters from the Chief Executive of Devon County Council dated 16 December 1997 on the impact of the latest BSE measures and 9 March on the agricultural sector in Devon; and when he expects to reply to them. [36809]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 1 April 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I sent to the Chief Executive dated 8 April 1998, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Local Government

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to strengthen the ethical framework for local government. [39843]

Mr. Dewar: I believe the public must be able to rely on the highest standards of conduct from its elected representatives. I also believe that there must be provision for swift and authoritative investigation of complaints of misconduct against councillors. That is why I have today published a consultation paper on the proposed new ethical framework for local government which would provide for clearer standards of conduct for councillors and stronger means of investigating and punishing misconduct. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Permanent Secretaries

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on the recruitment and appointment of permanent secretaries; in what circumstances open competition is used; and if he will make a statement. [37915]

The Prime Minister: Policy on the recruitment and appointment of permanent secretaries and on the use of open competition continues to be based on the checklist proposed in the Oughton Report on Career Management and Succession Planning published in November 1993 and endorsed by the last Government: namely

- is it necessary to fill the vacancy at all or at this level?
- if so, what is the nature of the job now and in the future?
- what qualifications, qualities, skills, experience and achievement record will a future job holder require?
- is there a sufficient field of candidates already within the department, or in order to get a strong field is it necessary to extend the search to the wider Civil Service or to full open competition?
- are there wider reasons in the departmental interest or the corporate interest of the Civil Service as a whole to provide the opportunity for new blood to be brought into the department or the Civil Service through this vacancy?

Ministerial Accommodation

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1998, Official Report, columns 19–20, concerning ministerial accommodation, if he will list the Government ministers in official accommodation on (a) 1 April 1997 and (b) 1 April 1998. [38448]

The Prime Minister: The Ministers with official Government residences on 1 April 1997 were:

The Prime Minister
The Chancellor of the Exchequer
The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs
The Home Secretary
The Secretary of State for Defence
The Secretary of State for Scotland
The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

In addition, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and other Northern Ireland Ministers had the use of accommodation in Hillsborough Castle while on duty in Northern Ireland.

At 1 April 1998, the following Ministers were in official Government residences:

Myself

The Deputy Prime Minister

The Chancellor of the Exchequer

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs

The Secretary of State for Defence

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment

The Secretary of State for Scotland

The President of the Board of Trade.

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and other Northern Ireland Ministers also have the use of accommodation in Hillsborough Castle while on duty in Northern Ireland.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those who worked in No. 10 Downing Street, giving their job titles, on (a) 1 April 1998 and (b) 1 April 1997. [38474]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 April 1998]: Those working in No. 10 Downing Street on the dates referred to were as follows:

	1 April 1998	1 April 1997
Private Secretaries, appointments and honours staff	25	21
Policy Unit	16	9
Press Office	11	10
Strategic Communications Unit	8	—
Support staff (including administrative, secretarial, messengerial, custodial, switchboard staff and drivers)	85	82
Political Office	7	8

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 72, if he will identify the precise references in the Ministerial Code to partners and officials. [38571]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The Ministerial Code seeks to lay down general principles. The key principle governing Ministerial travel was set out in my answer to the right hon. Member on 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 72.

Security Vetting Appeals Panel

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the members of the Security Vetting Appeals Panel indicating the criteria governing their appointment. [38868]

The Prime Minister: The members of the Security Vetting Appeals Panel are as follows:

Sir Anthony May (Chairman)

Dame Janet Smith DCB (Deputy Chairman)

Sir John Blelloch KCB

Sir Peter Woodward KCB

Mr. Peter Jones

Dr. George Gray.

The membership of the panel has been drawn up to reflect a range of interests. The Chairman and Deputy Chairman are senior members of the judiciary, currently a Lord Justice of Appeal and a High Court Judge respectively. The other Panel members have a background, at a senior level, in the Civil Service, the Armed Forces, the trades unions and industry, and related experience in security matters.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Stormont

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what areas of the Stormont estate have been taken over for (a) building and (b) paving since 1 January 1993; for what purposes and what planning permission was sought; what buildings are temporary; and how many car parking spaces are provided on the Stormont estate. [37160]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Since 1 January 1993, 3.31 acres in total of the Stormont Estate have been used for the sites of new temporary buildings (2.782 acres) or paving (.526 acres). The requirement for additional accommodation was brought about as a consequence of the fire in Parliament Buildings, the need to relieve overcrowding in other buildings in the Estate and to make provision for the political negotiations at Block B, Castle Buildings, which also required the creation of new car parking facilities elsewhere.

While the Crown is not bound by planning legislation, there is a procedure by which the Planning Service is consulted before Crown development proceeds. This consultation procedure was not followed in relation to the erection of a number of temporary buildings in the Stormont Estate because they were urgently required, namely:

6 Temporary Buildings in Main Castle Buildings Car Park

Temporary building at Block B for press and catering

Temporary accommodation within walled garden at Stormont Castle

Temporary building at Massey Avenue.

Other buildings erected after 1 January 1993, namely a temporary building at Craigantlet Buildings and a temporary store at Maynard Sinclair Pavilion, followed consultation procedure with the Planning Service.

There are presently 2,261 parking slots in the Stormont Estate.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make it her policy to support the creation of an all-Ireland tourist authority. [37978]

Mr. Ingram: The creation of an all-Ireland tourist authority will be a matter for consideration by the representatives of the proposed Northern Ireland Assembly and the Oireachtas meeting to consider this and other matters under the auspices of the proposed North/South Ministerial Council.

However, it should be noted that Bord Failte (Irish Tourist Board) and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) already co-operate closely in taking forward "Tourism Brand Ireland", a major all-Ireland promotional campaign launched in Autumn 1996.

Nurses

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses were recruited by each trust and how many nurses left each trust (a) through retirement, (b) to work for a nursing agency and (c) for other reasons in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [39303]

Mr. Worthington: Details of the number of nurses recruited and the number of nurses who left each trust in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 are set out in the table. The reasons for leaving are not held centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, columns 507–10, on departmental reviews, if the inter-departmental review of the Treatment of Vulnerable and Intimidated Witnesses announced on 13 June 1997 has been completed; and if he proposes to publish its findings. [39377]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 22 April 1998]: My right hon. Friend and I are currently considering how to take forward the final report of the inter-departmental working group on vulnerable or intimidated witnesses which we received recently.

Remand Prisoners (Drugs and Alcohol)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners were assessed to have (a) a drug abuse problem and (b) an alcohol abuse problem on admission, by region, for each of the past five years. [39369]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Poverty

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she will publish the results of the study commissioned by her Department into a rights-based approach to poverty elimination. [39345]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development has not commissioned a study on a rights-based approach to poverty elimination. However, we have funded the production of a paper by the NGO Rights and Humanity, on a Human Rights Approach to Development, which will be published shortly. I will arrange for a copy to be sent to the right hon. Gentleman.

Sustainable Development

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress she has made with her European counterparts in submitting a draft decision to the Commission on Sustainable Development to take forward the UN General Assembly Special Session decision on national sustainable development strategies; and if she will make a statement. [39344]

Clare Short: Under the UK Presidency, the EU has agreed a position to promote national sustainable development strategies which has been formally submitted to other countries and which is currently being pursued at the session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in New York.

Emergency Aid

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she has taken to review the co-ordination arrangements between Whitehall departments involved in emergency aid interventions. [39346]

Clare Short: Emergency aid interventions are co-ordinated by the Department for International Development in consultation with other Whitehall departments as necessary. These arrangements are kept under continuous review to ensure their effectiveness. Whenever appropriate, formal co-ordination mechanisms are established for specific emergency situations.

Swaziland

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will list those projects funded either in part or whole in Swaziland in each of the past three years, identifying each project by (a) name, (b) location and (c) purpose; [39393]

(2) if she will list the (a) name, (b) location and (c) purpose of projects currently funded, either solely or in partnership, in Swaziland. [39394]

Clare Short: The UK-Swaziland development partnership concentrates on tackling poverty and public sector reform. Bilateral expenditure in the last financial year was over £2.5 million (provisional) and we expect to spend a similar amount in the current financial year. The table lists current projects and those funded during the past three financial years.

Maternal Mortality

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the rate of maternal mortality from (a) acute respiratory infection, (b) diarrhoeal disease and (c) measles, as a proportion of total mortality in those refugee camps to which her Department provides assistance. [38643]

Clare Short: Maternal mortality is defined by the World Health Organisation as the death of a woman while pregnant or within 42 days of the end of pregnancy from causes related to or aggravated by pregnancy. The leading global causes of maternal mortality are severe bleeding, infection, unsafe abortion, eclampsia and obstructed labour. It is estimated that there are 585,000 such deaths throughout the world per year. However, the death of a woman due to causes such as acute respiratory infections, diarrhoea disease and measles is classed as an adult death and we do not have data on adult female mortality for these causes.

Nuclear Smuggling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aspects of the support her Department gives under the (a) Tacis, (b) Phare and (c) other assistance programmes to Eastern European and former states of the Soviet Union, are aimed at combating the smuggling of nuclear materials from these countries to (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the EU. [38724]

Clare Short: The Phare and Tacis programmes (to which we contributed about 14.6 per cent. of their total expenditure of 1,750 mecu in 1997) contain nuclear safety programmes which have been used to provide advice to countries in Central and Eastern Europe and Central Asia on the safe handling and storage of nuclear materials, including specific provision of a nuclear materials accountancy system in the region. Assistance from Phare and Tacis has also helped to improve border controls in the region, and should have had an indirect effect on smuggling of nuclear materials into the EU. Other multilateral institutions, such as the EBRD, to whom we contribute, have some activities in the nuclear safety sector; details are not immediately available to us. Assistance in this sector is not a priority for my Department's bilateral programme of technical assistance.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Conferences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many of his officials attended conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and how many and what percentage made (i) oral and (ii) written contributions to the matters under discussion in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31181]

Mr. Tom Clarke: In the period 1 March 1997 to 28 February 1998, 113 of my officials attended conferences in the UK, with 18 attending conferences overseas. Forty four made oral contributions and 17 made written contributions.

HEALTH

Primary Care

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from GPs on the effect on the incomes of GPs of participating in primary care groups; and if he will make a statement. [39287]

Mr. Milburn: We have regular meetings with all primary health care representative bodies, and the income of general practitioners participating in primary care groups is just one among a number of issues discussed. These issues will continue to be discussed, and guidance on various financial matters will be issued in the summer. These professional bodies are supportive of this Government's initiative to develop a new National Health Service, modern and dependable.

Public Spending

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the growth in public spending between 1997–98 and 1998–99 on health and social services in England relative to the previous three year period. [38259]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is shown in the table.

Government expenditure on health and personal social services (England)

£ million

	1994–95 outturn	1995–96 outturn	1996–97 outturn	1997–98 estimated outturn	1998–99 plans
Cash growth over previous year	1,812	1,332	910	1,526	1,828
Percentage growth over previous year (cash)	6.1	4.2	2.8	4.5	5.2

Dead Patients

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist concerning the length of time for removing a body from a bed in a public general ward when a patient is believed to have died. [39371]

Mr. Milburn: This is a matter for local determination. However, I would expect deceased patients to be removed from public general wards sensitively and as soon as possible.

Nurses

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were recruited by each NHS trust and how many nurses left each trust (a) through retirement, (b) to work for a nursing agency and (c) for other reasons in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [39302]

Mr. Milburn: Information about the numbers of nurses joining and leaving National Health Service trusts is collected by the Office of Manpower Economics. A summary of the results of the Office of Manpower Economics survey is published each year in the report of the review body for nurses, midwives and health visitors, copies of which are in the Library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the national roll-out of the New Deal. [38257]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Although it is early days, the national roll-out of the New Deal has seen an encouraging start. In the first week 2,435 Gateway interviews were held.

A good indication of how New Deal has been received is that over 2,600 young people have asked for early entry. This builds on good results from the twelve Pathfinder areas.

Government Funding (Essex)

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total amount of Government funding allocated to Essex County Council for the purposes of education for 1998–99; and what amount the Council has budgeted to spend. [36486]

Mr. Byers: Government support for education spending is provided mainly through the education SSA system but these are not recommended levels of expenditure. Essex's education SSA for 1998–99 is some £497 million—an increase of some £27 million or 5.8 per cent. I understand that Essex budgeted to spend some £475 million on education in 1997–98, £5 million more than the SSA for education (allowing for local government reorganisation) and has budgeted to spend some £494 million in 1998–99 which is £3 million less than its education SSA.

Training and Enterprise Councils (Greater London)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the economic development initiatives currently being funded by training and enterprise councils in Greater London from their accumulated reserves; and if he will make a statement. [38372]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is given in tables, copies of which I have placed in the Library.

Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to amend the Social Security (Students) Regulations 1998 to allow students who for bona fide reasons take time out from their studies to have access to state benefits. [39021]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Financial support is already available for higher education students who take time out from their studies owing to illness. In England and Wales, the Mandatory Awards Regulations provide that when a student is ill, the Local Education Authority (LEA) must continue to make payments under the award for 28 days. If a student remains ill after 28 days, the LEA has discretion to continue payments. Where a student has been absent from the course through illness for 28 weeks, he or she may apply for Income Support. At this point, the LEA support would be expected to cease. In England and Wales, the LEA also has discretion to continue support for other bona fide reasons.

In Scotland, students who are necessarily absent from their course owing to illness, but who intend to resume as soon as circumstances permit, may continue to receive maintenance from the Student Awards Agency for Scotland (SAAS) so long as they remain enrolled on the course.

We are considering what further action we might take on support for students forced to take time out from their studies.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the expected debt on graduation of a student entering a three-year undergraduate course in the autumn of 1998 under (a) the Government's student tuition fees proposals and (b) the Dearing Committee's proposals assuming receipt of a full maintenance grant; and if he will make a statement. [39328]

Dr. Howells: The maximum amount that a student can borrow will depend on the place of study, as well as the student's and his or her parents' or spouse's income. Under the Government's proposals, a student completing a three-year course outside London which began in 1998 and who took out the full loan available each year might expect to have borrowed a total of £9,355 in 1998 prices. The comparable figure under the Dearing Committee's proposals would be £8,083, assuming full implementation in 1998/99. Repayments under our proposed system will be made only when a graduate's income exceeds £10,000 a year and the level of repayments will then be linked directly to the individual's income above that amount. A graduate with an income of £17,000 per annum, for example, would make weekly repayments of about £12 a week.

Students and their families will be expected to contribute no more up front to the costs of their higher education under our proposals than they would under the current arrangements. Our proposals will ensure that students have access to the funds which they need while they are studying while generating substantial additional resources for investment in higher and further education.

Employment Action Plan

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place copies of the United Kingdom's Employment Action Plan in the Library. [39732]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Copies of the Employment Action Plan, which sets out the Government's policies for implementing the Employment Guidelines agreed at the Special European Council held in Luxembourg in November 1997, have been placed in the Library. The Plan contains the latest information on employment policy, including the announcements made by the Chancellor in his Budget on 17 March.

Disability Rights Commission

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the recommendations of the Disability Rights Task Force on the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission will be made available. [39842]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The recommendations of the Disability Rights Task Force on the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission were provided before Easter. They are currently under consideration across Government. The recommendations may be accessed, as can other Task Force papers, via the Internet (on website www.disability.gov.uk). Copies of the recommendations have also been placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Treasury Grant

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her plans for the Treasury Grant. [38245]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 9 March 1998, Official Report, columns 88–90.

We have no plans to change the basis on which Treasury Grant is made available to the National Insurance Fund.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gardening Leave

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomatic staff members, in each grade, were on gardening leave on 31 March for each year since 1997; and for what reason staff were on gardening leave. [38952]

Mr. Fatchett: There are no officers on gardening leave, but the hon. Member may like to know that on 31 March 1997, 15 officers were on standby while awaiting a new assignment. On 31 March 1998 the figure was 8.

Commonwealth Business Council

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made to set up the Commonwealth Business Council, as agreed at the Edinburgh Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. [39840]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The first meeting of the Commonwealth Business Council took place in London on 20 and 21 April under the chairmanship of Lord Cairns, with Mr. Cyril Ramaphosa as Vice-Chairman. It was attended by a number of leading business persons from throughout the Commonwealth. As agreed at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, its objective is to promote greater private sector involvement in the promotion of trade and investment, and thus prosperity, throughout the Commonwealth. The British Government were pleased to provide £250,000 towards the Council's start-up costs. We hope that other Commonwealth Governments and the private sector will also want to contribute to this most valuable initiative.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Arms Embargo)

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the steps taken by the Government to implement United Nations Security Council Resolution 1160 imposing an arms embargo on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [39841]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The EU already imposes an arms embargo on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The UK's interpretation of this embargo covers all goods and technology in Part III of Schedule I to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended (the so-called "Military List").

Following the adoption by the UN Security Council on 31 March of Resolution 1160 as a result of the recent violence in Kosovo, the Privy Council have made Orders in Council giving full effect to the action which the UK is required to take. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1998; the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Dependent Territories) Order 1998; the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Channel Islands) Order 1998; and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Isle of Man) Order 1998 were approved by the Privy Council on 22 April, and will come into force on 24 April. As a result of these Orders a licence will be required to supply any goods on the Military List to the FRY, so bringing under control such supplies abroad by UK-registered companies or nationals.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Allan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all departmental committees of inquiry which have been established since May 1995, indicating the date of establishment and name of the chairman; and if he will separately identify those departmental inquiries which have been set up by Ministers which have sought expert or lay opinion and which have been chaired by an individual outside Government. [35749]

Dr. David Clark: "Departmental Committee of Inquiry" is a term usually applied only to inquiries which have been set up by Ministers, which have sought expert or lay opinion, and which have normally been chaired by an individual outside Government. The following list details those inquiries established in this way since May 1995.

The list excludes advisory committees established to provide on-going advice (such as those advisory Non-Departmental Public Bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1997"), task forces and reviews set up since May 1997 to provide policy advice and recommendations (as listed in the Written Answer to a Question from Lord Chesham provided by my noble Friend Lord McIntosh of Haringey in the other place on 12 February 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 231–44 and inquiries set up routinely in pursuance of responsibilities under a statutory requirement, for example public inquiries held under planning legislation.

WALES

Economic Regulation Review

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the review of economic regulation in Wales to be published. [38805]

Mr. Hain: The Economic Strategy for Wales will be published in early summer. It will have no regulatory content.

New Deal

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Wales New Deal Advisory Task Force to report. [38926]

Mr. Hain: The Wales New Deal Advisory Task Force reports to Ministers at quarterly meetings. These are held alternately with the Task Force Chairman and with the full Task Force. The next such meeting is scheduled for 27 April.

Film Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways and by what amounts he has assisted the film industry in Wales. [39430]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Office does not provide direct support for the film industry but Sgrin, the new Media Agency for Wales which replaced the Wales Film Council and Screen Wales, receives a large part of its core funding from the Arts Council of Wales, Cardiff Bay Development Corporation and the Welsh Development Agency. The Arts Council has also awarded £2.2 million of Lottery money to 21 film projects in Wales.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the trust formed by the merging of the Maelor Hospital Trust and the Clwydian Community Trust to be operational; and if he will make a statement. [39437]

Mr. Win Griffiths: If it is decided to proceed with the merger of the NHS trusts in this area, the new trust will become operational on 1 April 1999. However, this is subject to the outcome of the forthcoming public consultation exercise.

Public Health

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to introduce health action zones in Wales. [38365]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd), on 22 April 1998, Official Report, column 806.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the link between poverty and ill health in Wales. [38367]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Chief Medical Officer's 1996 Annual Report examined the links between Health, Work and the Economy (Chapter 5). Overall, the report concluded that the excess of people who are economically inactive in Wales is due, firstly to a higher prevalence of limiting long-term illness, and secondly to a higher proportion of the long-term ill not working. There is evidence to suggest a correlation between poor living and working conditions and illness and disease. For example, the Welsh Health Survey (1995) found that people doing unskilled work have higher than average levels of heart disease, respiratory disease, mental illness, arthritis and pain.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the advantages to the health of the people in Wales of a closer working relationship between health services and social services. [38366]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Effective joint working between health services and social services is essential if vulnerable people are to receive high quality care which meets their needs and provides good value for money.

The recent Audit Commission report 'Coming of Age' demonstrated that improved joint planning and investment by health and local authorities is needed. The Welsh Office has therefore issued guidance seeking better collaboration at a local level to improve the quality and range of services provided for vulnerable and older people. I have agreed a programme of follow up action to support this process and ensure that priority is given to securing strategic operational change in this vital area. There is a clear agenda for health and local authorities to address together which will have significant benefits when fully implemented.

Nurses

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurses were recruited by each trust and how many nurses left each trust (a) through retirement, (b) to work for a nursing agency and (c) for other reasons in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [39301]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information is not held centrally. However, data on the number of qualified nurses recruited by each Trust and the overall number leaving each Trust in the years 1996–97 and 1997–98 are being collected but they will not be available until later in the year. I will write to the hon. Member when the data become available.

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what report on the position of the College in respect of European funding the Corporation of Gwent Tertiary College received at their June 1997 meeting; what was the substance of that report; and what action they took in response to it; [39440]

(2) how much Gwent Tertiary College estimates that they will have to repay to the European Union; and how much ESF money has been withheld by the EU to date for projects already agreed to; [39441]

(3) what is the surplus projected by Gwent Tertiary College for 1997–98; and what account has been taken of (a) moneys withheld by and (b) sums required to be repaid to the EU. [39442]

Mr. Hain: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible. Detailed questions of this kind are largely matters for the college itself or for the Department for Education and Employment but, as he is aware, I am anxious that he receives all the information I can provide for him on this matter.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Repairs

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future arrangements for the in-house deep repair of aircraft. [39844]

Dr. Reid: The deep repair and overhaul of aviation equipment are currently provided in the Ministry of Defence facilities (known as Third Line) and by industry (known as Fourth line). Third Line work is currently undertaken by two separate Defence Agencies, the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation (NARO) for helicopters and the RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency (RAF MGDA) for fixed wing aircraft.

We now propose to bring together Third Line repair in a single management structure, which would be known as the Defence Aviation Repair Agency (DARA). I will be setting work in hand immediately in order to launch the DARA as a new Agency on 1 April 1999 with a view to moving the organisation to Trading Fund Status as soon as practicable thereafter.

The aim is to recruit a Chief Executive for the DARA by open competition to take forward this challenging task. The Agency will be overseen by an Owner's Board chaired by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings of sub-group E on chemical and biological defence of the Technical Co-operation Programme have taken place since 1 January 1995; which countries took part in these meetings; where these meetings were held; and who represented the British Government at each meeting. [38612]

Mr. Spellar: The Technical Co-operation Programme, TTCP, involves collaboration between the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada and Australia. In 1997, the TTCP structure was reorganised and the former Sub-group E was renamed the Group on Chemical, Biological and Radiological Defence.

Since 1 January 1995, the Group has met annually in June. The 1995 meeting took place in Melbourne, Australia and was attended by Director CBD Porton Down as UK National Leader. In 1996, the meeting was held at the Chemical and Biological Defence sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, DERA, at Porton Down in the United Kingdom and was attended by Director CBD Porton Down as Executive Chairman plus an assistant and Chief Scientist, CBD Sector as UK National Leader. The 1997 meeting was held at Edgewood in the United States and was attended by MD Science, DERA as Executive Chairman, together with an assistant and Director CBD Sector as UK National Representative. All British attendees were MOD staff.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many International Task forces have been established under the 1980 Memorandum of Understanding on chemical and biological defence between Britain, the United States of America and Canada since 1 January 1995; and what subjects each of these task forces cover. [38610]

Mr. Spellar: Seven International Task forces have been established under the 1980 Memorandum of Understanding on chemical and biological defence between Britain, the United States of America and Canada since 1 January 1995. They cover collaboration between the three nations to address defences against chemical and biological agents of concern. I am unable to give the individual topics as these are classified and I am therefore withholding these details under exemption 1 of Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the technical panels and action groups which have been active under sub-group E on chemical and biological defence of the Technical Co-operation Programme since 1 January 1995. [38613]

Mr. Spellar: The Technical Co-operation Programme, TTCP, involves collaboration between the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada and Australia. In 1997, the TTCP structure was re-organised and the former sub-group E was renamed the Group on Chemical, Biological and Radiological Defence.

The technical panels active since 1 January 1995 are:

Biological warfare countermeasures;

Chemical and biological hazard assessment;

Biological agent detection;

Low burden individual protective clothing.

The action groups since 1 January 1995 are:

Gene probes;

Medical countermeasures against vesicant agents;

Absorbents;

Decontamination of chemical and biological hazards;

Treaty analytical methodologies;

Gene probes II;

Radiological hazards.

Death Penalty

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the benefits of removing the death penalty from military law; and if he will make a statement. [39220]

Dr. Reid: During the passage of the Armed Forces Act 1996 it was suggested that the death penalty, in the Service context, should be abolished. As a result the previous administration undertook to carry out a fundamental review of the need to retain the death penalty as a maximum punishment for certain offences under Service law. This work is in progress. I will advise the House of the outcome as soon as possible.

TREASURY

Gaming Machines

20. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from working men's clubs regarding the effect of the Budget on gaming machines. [38263]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received one representation from the National Union of Labour and Socialist Clubs.

Sterling

21. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages to Britain of a weaker pound; and if he will make a statement. [38265]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Government have made clear that we have taken the decisions that are important for creating a stable and competitive pound over the medium term. The best thing the Government can do to help British industry is to ensure businesses have the stability to plan and invest with confidence, avoiding a return to the boom and bust past which damaged prosperity and destroyed jobs.

35. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he is having with the Governor of the Bank of England concerning the level of the pound sterling. [38279]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have regular meetings with the Governor at which a range of matters are discussed.

International Debt

22. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from Church leaders on his policy to reduce the debt burden of the poorest countries. [38266]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have made considerable progress in securing international agreement to the Mauritius Mandate and will continue to press for its speedy and determined implementation. Since his Mauritius Mandate statement to the Commonwealth Finance Ministers last September, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has held a number of meetings with religious leaders and NGO heads to discuss the issue of debt relief and keep them informed of progress.

25. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to reduce the debt burden of the poorest countries. [38269]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government are fully committed to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative that was launched by the IMF and World Bank in September 1996. In his speech to Commonwealth Finance Ministers in Mauritius last year, the Chancellor called on the international community to commit itself to dealing with the problem of unsustainable debt burdens faced by the world's poorest countries once and for all. He urged creditors and debtors to undertake action in order to ensure that at least three-quarters of the twenty countries, initially identified by the World Bank and IMF as probably needing debt relief under the HIPC initiative, have had decisions on the size and timing of their relief by the year 2000.

The Chancellor also encouraged all countries identified under the initiative to embark on the process of securing debt relief by the millennium.

The Government have made considerable progress towards securing international commitment to implementing the Mauritius Mandate. The Government will continue in their efforts to ensure that the Mauritius Mandate targets are met.

31. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on his policy to reduce the debt burden of the poorest countries. [38275]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor has recently given evidence to the International Development Committee of this House, and has attended the IMF and World Bank Spring meetings in Washington.

32. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with Church leaders in relation to reducing the debt burden of the poorest countries. [38276]

Mrs. Liddell: Since his Mauritius Mandate statement to Commonwealth Finance Ministers last September, the Chancellor has held a number of meetings with religious leaders and NGO heads to discuss the issue of debt relief.

Income Tax (Derbyshire)

23. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the percentages of income tax payers paying the higher rate in (a) Derbyshire and (b) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [38267]

Dawn Primarolo: In 1995–96, the latest year for which there is comparable information, 5 per cent. of taxpayers in Derbyshire paid income tax at the higher rate, compared with 8.1 per cent. in the United Kingdom. It is not possible to provide a reliable breakdown below the United Kingdom level for 1998–99.

Budget (Work Incentives)

24. Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Budget measures to increase the financial incentive to work. [38268]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Budget contained a comprehensive set of measures to help ensure that work pays, including the Working Families Tax Credit and reform to National Insurance Contributions.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

28. Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the definition of the public sector borrowing requirement. [38272]

Mr. Darling: The public sector borrowing requirement measures borrowing by the whole public sector from the private sector and overseas.

33. Mr. White: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the definition of the public sector borrowing requirement used in other European Union countries; and what plans he has for changes to the UK's PSBR definition. [38277]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Other EU Member States use a range of definitions of government borrowing. There will be a number of small technical changes to the definition of the PSBR later this year resulting from the construction of national accounts according to the definitions in the European System of Accounts 1995 (ESA95). These changes were set out in Annexe B of the March 1998 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Advance Corporation Tax

29. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra revenue will be raised in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 by the abolition of advance corporation tax and the introduction of quarterly payments of corporation tax. [38273]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the March 1998 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" Table C.1 and paragraph C.87.

Pensioners' Fuel Bills

30. Mr. Darvill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from pensioners' organisations on his tax and benefit changes to reduce pensioners' fuel bills. [38274]

Dawn Primarolo: The payments of £50 to pensioner households on income support and £20 to all other pensioner households have been generally welcomed.

Savings Ratio

34. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the savings ratio, in the latest year for which figures are available; and what is his forecast for the savings ratio for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01. [38278]

Mrs. Liddell: The personal sector saving ratio was 11 per cent. in 1997. A modest cyclical fall in the saving ratio is expected over the next three years. But over the longer term the introduction of ISAs and policies to promote economic growth and stability will increase the incentive to save for investment.

EU Deficits

36. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many EU member states have deficits of less than 3 per cent. of gross domestic product. [38280]

Mr. Gordon Brown: According to the Commission's Convergence Report, 14 Member States had a government balance in 1997 which was better than or equal to the Maastricht reference value for the deficit of 3 per cent. of GDP.

Duty-free Sales

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from companies operating from Newhaven on the impact of the abolition of duty-free sales. [38270]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of representations from companies located throughout the United Kingdom about the abolition of intra-European union duty free sales in June 1999. However, no records are held which would readily identify the geographical locations of those companies. Obtaining the information cannot be undertaken except at disproportionate cost.

Working Families Tax Credit

Caroline Flint: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his proposals for a working families tax credit. [38271]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Working Families Tax Credit has been welcomed by a wide range of individuals and organisations.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) range of fluctuation and (b) average exchange rate of sterling against the deutschmark in (i) the period May 1996-May 1997 and (ii) the period since May 1997. [39317]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 23 April 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the exchange rate of sterling against the Deutsche Mark.

The figures are shown below and are drawn from observations of indicative middle-market (mean of spot buying and selling) rates as observed by the Bank of England Foreign Exchange Desk in the London interbank market during late afternoon trading.

Range of fluctuation and average rate of sterling against Deutsche Mark

	Lowest	Highest	Average
May 1996-May 1997	2.2795	2.8202	2.5242
May 1997 to date	2.7915	3.0970	2.9429

Information on exchange rates of sterling against other currencies is published in Table 7.1A of the ONS monthly publication Financial Statistics, and on the ONS database, which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. The data is produced by Bank of England.

Planning Policy Guidance

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to develop economic instruments to support planning policy guidance. [38999]

Mr. Darling: In his Budget statement, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor referred to the ongoing work on the potential of a tax on the extraction of aggregates. Other economic instruments that could be used to further the Government's planning policies are being kept under review.

TREASURY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the Green Paper on Welfare Reform, if the Government's definition of universal national benefits would cover disability living allowance (a) subject to taxation and (b) means-tested. [38867]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 April 1998]: The Welfare Reform Green Paper sets the framework for the review of disability living allowance, rather than offer detailed proposals for reform. However it makes it clear that disability living allowance will remain a universal, national benefit and as such will not be subject to a means test.

Consumer Prices Index

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will express the Bank of England's inflation target in terms of the harmonised index of consumer prices. [39571]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's inflation target of 2½ per cent. was confirmed in the March Budget. It is defined as the 12-month increase in the Retail Prices Index excluding mortgage interest payments (RPIX).

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance he has issued to the Monetary Policy Committee on the account it should take of trends in the harmonised index of consumer prices where they differ from the RPI trend. [39575]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor's guidance to the Monetary Policy Committee is set out in his remit letter of 12 June 1997.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned on the accuracy of the RPI as a measure of inflation. [39570]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 24 April 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the accuracy of the RPI as a measure of inflation.

The ONS is currently engaged in research into a number of aspects of RPI accuracy. Some of it is described in an article in the October 1997 issue of Economic Trends, pages 56–62; a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

The ONS has also commissioned work from the University of Cardiff Business School, the Institute of Fiscal Studies, The University of Sheffield and Simon Fraser University, British Columbia.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the principal factors which underlie differences in trends of (a) the RPI and (b) the harmonised indices of consumer prices. [39566]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 24 April 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the assessment of the principal factors which underline differences in trends between the retail prices index (RPI) and the harmonised index of consumer prices (HICP).

A recent analysis of these trends was published in an article about the HICP in Economic Trends No. 531, February 1998, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. The analysis showed that, during 1997, the trend in the HICP annual rate of inflation was broadly similar to that for RPI excluding mortgage interest payments (RPIX). During this period, the annual rate of inflation for the HICP was, on average, 0.9 percentage points lower than RPIX of which:

i. the effect of using the geometric mean in the HICP for the calculation of elementary aggregates of prices at the most basic level, as opposed to arithmetic means in the RPIX, contributed 0.5 percentage points to the difference between the two inflation measures.

ii. coverage differences, such as the exclusion of Council Tax, house depreciation and some health and education expenditure from the HICP, in addition to the inclusion of a series for personal computers in the HICP (excluded from the RPI prior to January 1998) contributed a further 0.4 percentage points to the difference between the two measures of inflation.

Self-assessment

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated financial impact of reductions in the number of Inland Revenue staff in 1998–99; what consultation with trades unions took place on this matter; and what assessment he has made of the impact of staff reductions on the Revenue's capacity to deal with self-assessment of taxation. [38068]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue has no plans to reduce staff numbers during 1998–99. Existing staffing plans, drawn up before the Budget, indicate that employee numbers will remain broadly level, at just under 50,000, over the course of the year. This has been discussed with union representatives. Adequate numbers of trained people are in place to deal with Self Assessment.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the payment of tuition fees to be set against income for tax purposes. [39028]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax relief is already available for certain payments made for vocational training. Details of the relief are given in the Inland Revenue leaflet IR119

"Tax relief for vocational training". While we have no plans to introduce an expensive general tax relief for tuition fees, the hon. Gentleman should be aware from our recent consultation paper on the Learning Age (Cm 3790) that we are considering targeted public support to encourage people to open individual learning accounts which might involve tax incentives.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will allow the payment of tuition fees for full-time undergraduates to be set against income for personal taxation purposes. [39030]

Dawn Primarolo: Help is already available to those who need it most. It would not be appropriate to give tax relief to those able to afford the fees.

Inflation Target

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he set an inflation target of 2.5 per cent. for the Bank of England Monetary Policy Committee; what plans he has to review that target rate; and what assessment he has made of the effect of that rate on the exchange rate. [39572]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor set out the basis of the 2½ per cent. inflation target in his remit for the Monetary Policy Committee and the Mansion House speech on 12 June 1997. He noted that the inflation target will be confirmed in each Budget. The UK's inflation rate relative to that in other countries is only one of a range of factors that influence the exchange rate.

Bank of England Act

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes that the Bank of England Act 1998 should come into force. [40074]

Mr. Darling: An order has been made today bringing into force all the provisions of the Act on 1 June 1998.

Historic Registration Records

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that registration records over 75 years old are made easily and cheaply available by means of microfilmed copies. [39648]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Oliver Letwin, dated 24 April 1998:

In the absence of the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary question on registration records.

The Registration Acts are quite specific as to the means of access to all the records of births, deaths and marriages. The Acts allow members of the public to search the indexes in order to identify the entries they are looking for and to obtain certified copies (certificates) on payment of the appropriate statutory fees. The Registrar General has no powers to make available or disclose registration information in any other way.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Weapons

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the perceived sources by country of origin and method of procurement of weapons thought to have been used by Republican and Loyalist paramilitaries in each fatal and non-fatal shooting incident forensically investigated by the security forces since 1982. [37808]

Mr. Ingram: The information sought is not available and to obtain it would incur disproportionate cost.

Homophobic Crime

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the number of homophobic incidents recorded by the RUC in each of the last five years; what estimate she has made of the under-reporting of homophobic crime; and what proposals she has to increase the confidence of homosexual people in reporting crimes against them to the police. [39208]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 22 April 1998]: The statistical information requested is not currently available. The crime-recording database maintained by the RUC is based on Home Office "counting rules". It is not programmable to elicit the requested information.

The RUC is engaged in discussion with representative groupings throughout Northern Ireland to foster better relationships and encourage the homosexual community to report offending against them on the understanding that such reports will be investigated in the impartial and professional manner in which the RUC investigates all reported offending.

The RUC is also currently reviewing policy in this area to take account of recent Association of Chief Police Officers' Guidelines (December 1997) for dealing with incidents involving the gay and lesbian community.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list by category of offence, the type of offences reported or recorded as homophobic crime. [39215]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 22 April 1998]: The information requested is not currently available. The crime-recording database maintained by the RUC is based upon Home Office "counting rules". It is not programmable to elicit the requested information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decision has been taken about Sir Herman Ouseley's continuation as Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality. [40005]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am very glad to announce that Sir Herman has agreed to continue in his present position and that I have re-appointed him for a further term of office up to 18 April 2002.

Vulnerable and Intimidated Witnesses

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) legal practitioners and (b) victims have taken part in the inter-departmental review of vulnerable and intimidated witnesses announced on 13 June 1997. [39382]

Mr. Michael: The working group on vulnerable or intimidated witnesses included a representative from Victim Support as well as representatives from the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers. The working group received about fifty written contributions from a wide range of organisations and individuals, including the Law Society, the Criminal Bar Association and organisations representing victims. Two special conferences were held towards the end of last year to test out some of the ideas being considered by the working group. These were attended by individuals concerned with these important issues including members of the judiciary and the legal profession and non-governmental organisations representing victims. The working group found this to be an extremely valuable exercise which greatly assisted their work.

Police Officers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in each police force, on 31 March; if he will list the change in numbers in each force and in total from (a) 30 September 1997 and (b) 31 March 1997; and if he will make a statement. [39477]

Mr. Michael: Information on police numbers at 31 March 1998 is not yet available. The table sets out police numbers in each force at 31 March and 30 September 1997 along with the change during that period.

Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force area, within the resources available to them.

Sex Offenders Register

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many entries on the Sex Offenders Register have been found to be inaccurate. [39645]

Mr. Michael: Ensuring that the data on the Register are accurate and up-to-date is a key concern of the police both at national and local level. Police forces have in place local arrangements for validating and auditing the data on a regular basis. This includes checking the whereabouts of convicted paedophiles to ensure that they are correctly registered. A number of national checks of data have also been run to identify any anomalies (such as registrations from those not required to register under the Act) which are then referred back to local forces for action.

Statistics about the accuracy of the Register in general terms are not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Solihull will receive a reply to his letter to him dated 10 February and his further letter on the same subject dated 15 April. [39583]

Mr. Michael: I wrote to the hon. Member on 7 April in response to his letter to me of 10 February. We have not yet received a letter dated 15 April from the hon. Member but will reply to any additional points raised in it as soon as possible after receipt.

Drug-related Offences

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of prisoners currently serving sentences for drug-related offences in (a) HMP Risley and (b) the North-West Region. [39368]

Ms Quin [holding answer 23 April 1998]: Provisional information shows that there were 130 persons sentenced for drug offences in Her Majesty's Prison Risley on 31 March 1998. This compares with 1,520 persons in the North West region (including those in Her Majesty's Prison Risley) which includes the Prison Service Areas of Mersey, Manchester and the North West.

Probation Service

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy in relation to the local provision of probation services. [39500]

Ms Quin: We see it as important that the probation service should operate effectively at local level, which includes co-operating effectively on crime reduction and community safety strategies with local authorities and other agencies. What this means in terms of the future organisation, structure and funding of the service is a question which we have been addressing as part of the prisons/probation review, on which we shall be publishing a consultation document.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department has issued on the size of population centre in respect of which individual probation offices should be maintained. [39501]

Ms Quin: None.

Magistrates Court Warrants

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warrants issued by magistrates courts for breach of a probation, community service or combination order are currently outstanding; what was the average period taken by the police to enforce such a warrant in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [38659]

Ms Quin: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Young Offender Institutions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the budgets given to the governors of each young offender institution in (a) London and (b) the South East for each of the last five years for which figures are available. [39298]

Ms Quin: The information is given in the table.

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the tables.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the terms of reference of the spending review relating to the asylum process. [39389]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A copy of the terms of reference for the inter-departmental study of the asylum process has now been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

London Underground

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to bring the London Underground East London line into use for rail passenger services; and if he will make a statement. [39677]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Transport officially re-opened the East London Line on 24 March.

Great Western Trains

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the latest punctuality figures for Great Western Trains in terms of the percentage of passengers whose trains arrive on time. [39699]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Latest punctuality figures for Great Western Trains will be published in the Franchising Director's next network performance bulletin in May. Punctuality figures for the year up to 7 December 1997 were published in the bulletin dated 15 January 1998, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Punctuality data are collected in terms of the percentage of scheduled services which arrive on time (within 9 minutes 59 seconds of the scheduled journey time), Monday-Saturday, not the percentage of passengers whose trains arrive on time.

Rents

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average level of rent paid by local authority tenants in (a) Greater London and (b) England in each year since 1989. [39339]

Mr. Raynsford: The average weekly rents for local authority tenants for the financial years since 1989–90 are as follows:

1989–90	20.86	24.65

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average level of rent paid by tenants of housing associations and other registered social landlords in (a) England and (b) Greater London in each year since 1989. [39340]

Mr. Raynsford: Rents covering the whole Registered Social Landlords/housing associations stock have been collected by the Housing Corporation since 1992. The average weekly rents for England and Greater London are as follows:

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average level of rent paid by tenants of private landlords in (a) England and (b) Greater London in each year since 1989. [39338]

Mr. Raynsford: The figures shown in the table are from the Family Expenditure Survey (FES) for years up to 1992 and from the Survey of English Housing (SEH), which has a larger sample, from 1993–94. The FES was run on a calendar year basis up to 1992, while the SEH has been on a financial year basis since it started in April 1993.

1994–95	68	99
1995–96	74	105
1996–97	81	125

Notes:

1. The averages exclude rent-free lettings.

2. Rents include water rates and services if included with the rental payment.

3. Like all estimates from sample surveys, these figures are subject to sampling variability. The figures for Greater London are subject to greater sampling variability than those for England as a whole because of the smaller sample size. Individual year-to-year movements shown by the estimates, both for Greater London and for England, are liable to reflect variations in the sample as well as real changes, but the broad indication of long term trends will still be valid.

4. A comparison between the SEH and the FES does not indicate any systematic differences in average private rents due to differences in survey method.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to undertake consultation on matters relating to the private rented sector, with particular reference to houses in multiple occupation. [39337]

Mr. Raynsford: We are committed to introducing a national licensing system for houses in multiple occupation (HMOs) where the worst housing conditions in the private rented sector tend to be found. We expect to consult on proposals later this year. I cannot say at this stage when we will have the opportunity to legislate. In the shorter term we propose to introduce a Code of Practice under existing powers covering fire safety and other amenity standards in HMOs. We expect to issue a consultation paper during the summer.

Structure Plans (Transport)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the applicability and enforcement of county structure plans in respect of transport policies in circumstances where they conflict with proposals within the forthcoming Government White Paper. [39585]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires all decisions on planning matters to be made in accordance with the adopted development plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Where plan policies are superseded by new planning policy guidance issued by the Secretary of State, local authorities must have regard to the new guidance when taking planning decisions. They will also take account of the revised guidance when updating their development plans. The Secretary of State will have regard to any more recent guidance in determining called-in planning applications on appeals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ex Gratia Payments

Mr. Wills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the statutory provisions governing ex gratia payment in cases involving employment agencies. [39426]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There are no statutory provisions specifically ex gratia payments in cases involving employment agencies.

Contaminated Land

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on funding for research and development into remediation technologies applicable to contaminated land. [39353]

Mr. Battle: There are a range of schemes to encourage R&D applicable to contaminated land remediation. The main ones are listed below.

The Foresight programme brings together Government, industry and researchers to define a common agenda.

The five year Link Biological Treatment of Soil & Water Programme provided £4.6m of Government funding; although it is now closed to new projects dissemination is ongoing.

The Water Biotreatment Club is a forum established with DTI funding for those involved in environmental biotechnology research and development.

The Biotechnology Means Business (BMB) Initiative is a package of measures aimed at increasing awareness of the opportunities biotechnology presents and encouraging implementation of biotechnology within industry.

URGENT is a £9.7m programme of urban environmental research launched in February of this year, which will include research into the costs involved in recovering and developing contaminated land.

CONSEPT will be a series of land remediation technology projects—some to be underway by the Autumn. The Steering group is chaired by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. It aims to take forward remediation technologies from the scientists' bench to workable, marketable solutions by getting research bodies and industry together to establish test sites. The budget is c.£10k per year for approximately 3 years.

The SMART scheme provides grants to assist with technical and commercial feasibility studies into innovative technology and to develop, up to pre-production prototype, new products or processes which demonstrate significant advances on existing technology.

Finally there is the Environmental Technology Best Practice Programme: contaminated land remediation is not a priority area at present but could be considered if industry put forward a case.

Postal Charges

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the recent increase in the level of postal charges to Europe above that for inland post; and if she will make a statement. [39483]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office consulted the Government and the Post Office Users National Council (POUNC) about the proposed increase, who have accepted the need for it. Handling costs have risen and the Post Office was not fully covering its costs. It is still one of the cheapest rates in Europe.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what comment she has made of the effect on British industry of substituting the 20 per cent. reduction in the greenhouse gases specified in the Kyoto Protocol for the Government's target for the 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide. [38955]

Mr. Battle: The Government plan to publish a consultation document in the summer on a new Climate Change Programme. This will focus on policy options for meeting our legally binding target from Kyoto, but also look at measures that would move beyond that towards our aim of a 20 per cent. reduction in CO_2 emissions. We are inviting views from all sectors throughout this consultation process.

Post Office Counters

Mr. Green: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to restructure Post Office Counters Ltd., with particular reference to plans to allow the separation of the Logistics Business Unit from POCL. [39456]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Decisions relating to the day-to-day running of the postal businesses, such as the internal structure and organisation of constituent business units, are the responsibility of the Post Office Board and management.

Omani British Offset Programme

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Omani British Offset Programme was agreed; and if he will list specific defence sales agreements which it contains. [39243]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave her on 21 April 1998, Official Report, column 557. While specific details of individual offset projects remain, at present, confidential between the Governments of the UK and Oman, the main areas involved are the civil aviation, finance, pharmaceuticals and construction industries, as well as sport and education related projects.

WALES

National Curriculum

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the review on the National Curriculum in Wales to report. [38817]

Mr. Hain: The Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority (ACCAC) are due to report on the review of the National Curriculum in June. The report will deal with proposals for the year 2000. Additionally, I have now received the Authority's advice on how best to reduce overload in the primary school curriculum. I wrote to all schools to announce my response to this on 23 April.

Literacy

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the level of literacy rates within each county and county borough in Wales. [38603]

Mr. Hain: In July 1997 The Basic Skills Agency published the results of a 1995 survey of people aged 16 to 64 which showed the following (see table) levels of reading skills in the old county council areas.

The available information for school pupils relates to performance in National Curriculum Tests in English and Welsh at age 7, 11 and 14. The latest information was contained in the National Curriculum results booklets published last November. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

The White Paper "Building Excellent Schools Together" set out our proposals for improving standards of literacy so that by the year 2000 between 60 and 70 per cent. of our 11 and 14 year olds should attain the expected levels in the core subjects including English and Welsh; and by the year 2002 this should be raised to between 70 and 80 per cent.

Tourism Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on prospects for the tourism industry. [39431]

Mr. Hain: Tourism in Wales has enjoyed particular success in recent years and prospects look good for the future.

It is estimated that in 1997 spend by tourists in Wales will total £1.9 billion including £234 million from overseas tourists.

The European summit in June and the Rugby World Cup in 1999 provide further opportunities to raise the profile of Wales world-wide. The Wales Tourist Board in collaboration with other agencies and the Tourism Industry itself is working to ensure that Wales derives maximum benefit from these events.

Deaf and Autistic Children

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department provides for deaf and autistic children; and if he will make a statement. [39436]

Mr. Hain: Local education authorities and schools are responsible for identifying and making appropriate provision for children with special educational needs (SEN), including children with sensory impairment and specific learning difficulties associated with autism. In making appropriate provision, schools and LEAs are required to have regard to the guidance contained in the 'Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of SEN', a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The Department is undertaking a comprehensive review of SEN policy, practice and guidance in the light of responses to the recent Green Paper on SEN 'The BEST for Special Education' (Cm 3792). The Green Paper places greater emphasis on earlier identification and more appropriate intervention and highlights the importance of stronger regional planning in the provision of effective SEN support, particularly in relation to children with low incidence disabilities such as sensory impairment and autism.

SEN provision in schools in Wales will benefit from the additional £50 million revenue funding being provided for schools this year, and the additional capital funding being provided for school buildings over the lifetime of this Parliament.

The Department also makes some £1.3 million available each year under the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme to support the effective implementation of the Code of Practice and for SEN teacher training. The training of teachers of pupils with sensory disabilities and autistic children are specific priorities under the GEST programme.

In addition to grant aiding a number of voluntary SEN/disability support organisations, the Department has made £500,000 available to local authorities in Wales for the period 1996–97 to 1997–98 under the Schools Access Initiative. This initiative is designed to improve access to schools and the curriculum for pupils with physical and sensory disabilities.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 April 1998, Official Report, column 440, and 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 399, if he will make a statement on the compatibility of the figures quoted for the cost of the void office space to be covered by the accumulated figures for the reserves of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority with the figures quoted for the actual reserves accumulated in the last five years. [39692]

Mr. Ron Davies: The level of reserves at each financial year end varies depending on several factors including provisions for void space, capital cash flow and supplies stock levels.

DEFENCE

Meteorological Office

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Meteorological Office for 1998–99. [40004]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office is responsible for providing meteorological services and weather forecasts for a wide range of customers, including the Armed Forces, government, civil aviation, shipping, emergency services, media, commerce, industry and the public. It also undertakes research related to meteorology and climate. During 1998–99 the Meteorological Office will be set the following challenging targets:

Key Target 1

To achieve a value of at least 111.1 index points on 31 March 1999 from a baseline of 100.0 on 31 March 1995, for the global Numerical Weather Prediction (NWP) index, which measures the overall forecasting skill of the global NWP model;

Key Target 2

To achieve an index level of 104.0 by 31 March 2000 from a baseline of 100.0 at 31 March 1997, and to achieve an increase of at least 2.0 index points during 1998–99 for the UK NWP partial index, which measures the forecasting skill of the NWP model for the UK;

Key Target 3

To increase the index of service quality to at least 104.8 on 31 March 1999 from a baseline of 100.0 for 1996–97, in line with agreed customer requirements. The index covers representative services and products across defence, civil aviation, public and business users;

Key Target 4

To improve efficiency from a baseline of 100.0 on 31 March 1997 to at least 108.0 on 31 March 1999 as measured by the agreed Efficiency Index;

Key Target 5

To achieve an overall return on capital employed (ROCE) of at least 7% taken year on year. For the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 to achieve an overall ROCE of at least 11.6% averaged over the two years;

Key Target 6

To make a contribution from commercial activities in 1998–99 of not less than £1.1 million, on the agreed basis of measurement.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the programme officers and the requirements officers of the 1980 Memorandum of Understanding on chemical and biological defence between Britain, the United States of America and Canada have met since 1 January 1995; and where these meetings were held. [38611]

Mr. Spellar: The dates and locations of the meetings of the Programme Officers and Requirement Offices of the 1980 MOU and CBD since 1 January 1995 are as follows:

Date	Location
6–7 March 1995	US Army Chemical School, Fort McClellan, AL, USA
19–20 September 1995	CBD Porton Down, UK
19–20 March 1996	Defence Research Establishment Suffield, Medicine Hat, Canada
17–18 September 1996	US Naval Coastal Systems Station, Florida, USA
13–14 March 1997	CBD Porton Down, UK
16–17 September 1997	Defence Research Establishment Suffield, Medicine Hat, Canada
10–11 March 1998	Natick Research, Development and Engineering Centre, Natick, USA

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the reductions in total spending at DERA in Shoeburyness in consequence of the transfer of work to Eskmeals; and what will be the additional costs involved in carrying out this work at Eskmeals. [36388]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 March 1998]: There is currently significant overcapacity on the DERA test and evaluation land ranges. The proposals made by DERA to match the capacity of the ranges to the needs of the Ministry of Defence involve concentrating work at the Eskmeals range, thereby using capacity at that site, with the range at Shoeburyness and Pendine operating only as required. The environmental test centre and the demilitarisation facilities at Shoeburyness would remain fully operational. The cost of operating the Eskmeals and Shoeburyness sites in this way is assessed as about £15.8 million per year; were the Eskmeals site to be closed and all of the work concentrated at Shoeburyness, the annual cost would be £16.8 million. Currently, the two sites cost some £23.9 million to operate each year.

Sewn and Knitted Products

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of spending on sewn and knitted products for service personnel is purchased from (a) UK-based companies, (b) EU-based companies and (c) non-EU-based companies. [36818]

Mr. Spellar: The bulk of procurement of sewn and knitted products for service personnel is carried out through the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. J. Deas to Mr. Andrew George, dated 24 April 1998:

In the unavoidable absence of my Chief Executive I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the proportion of spending on sewn and knitted products for service personnel purchased within UK-based, EU-based and non-EU-based companies, as this matter falls within the area of responsibility of the Defence Clothing & Textiles Agency.

This information is not readily available and would involve a disproportionate cost to identify a precise answer, as we would have to go through each individual contract manually. However, a quick analysis of contracts placed in financial year 1997/98 would indicate the following proportions: in UK 80%, elsewhere in EU 15% and non-EU 5%.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the gross value of textile and knitwear contracts placed with Remploy was in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1997–98. [36820]

Mr. Spellar: The bulk of the MOD contracts placed with Remploy for procurement of textile and knitted products are carried out through the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member. In addition there may be some local purchase of items from Remploy for which we do not hold records centrally and which could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Mr. J. Deas to Mr. Andrew George, dated 24 April 1998:

In the unavoidable absence of my Chief Executive I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the gross value of textile and knitwear contracts placed with Remploy in 1993–94 and 1997–98, as this matter falls within the area of responsibility of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency (DCTA).

Our records show contracts to the value of £18.8M in 1993–94 and £3.0M in 1997–98, VAT inclusive, placed with Remploy by the DCTA. These figures include all items procured by the DCTA, as the tri-Service Agency responsible for the majority of the clothing and textile items purchased by the MOD. However, we are not responsible for certain clothing and textile items, such as Aircrew clothing, for which we are informed that contracts were placed with Remploy to a value of £51,865 in 1993–94 and £439,105 in 1997–98.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent in each of the last five years on the purchase of sewn and knitted products for service personnel. [36816]

Mr. Spellar: The bulk of the procurement of sewn and knitted products for service personnel is carried out through the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member. In addition there is some expenditure by individual MOD budget areas on local purchase of clothing services, which includes non-centrally supplied items, footwear repair and supply of cleaning cloths. Records on the procurement of these items are not held centrally and to identify expenditure on them would involve disproportionate cost.

Letter from Mr. J. Deas to Mr. Andrew George, dated 24 April 1998:

In the unavoidable absence of my Chief Executive I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about how much his Department has spent in each of the last 5 years on the purchase of sewn and knitted products for service personnel, as this matter falls within the area of responsibility of the Defence Clothing & Textiles Agency (DCTA).

The DCTA is a tri-Service organisation, formed in 1994, that procures clothing and textile items, which would mostly all fit into this category in one way or another, e.g. from shirts, trousers and jackets through to tentage and load carriage equipment. It may be that some items such as Aircrew clothing, procured outside of this Agency, would also fall within this category. The DCTA also procures General Stores and Defence Accommodation Stores.

In light of the above I wish to inform you of the nett sums, VAT inclusive, that this Agency has spent on all clothing and textile requirements since its inception (including the forecast final expenditure for the financial year just completed), as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Quangos

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 6 April 1998, Official Report, columns 68–69, when the Government review on quangos will be completed. [38815]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster published a consultation paper on 11 November reaffirming the Government's commitment to keep the number of quangos to a minimum and setting out proposals for making those which remain more open, accountable and effective. We are currently evaluating the 400 or so responses to the consultation paper, which we have received from a wide range of individuals and organisations, and propose to publish the results of the consultation when it is completed later this year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bone-in Beef

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the legality and enforcement issues raised by the outcome of the case known as Procurator Fiscal v. Sutherland. [39661]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Sheriff in Selkirk in the case of the Procurator Fiscal v. Sutherland held that Regulation 3(2) of the Beef Bone Regulations is defective. This judgment, which was based on legal argument and not food safety issues, is not binding on any other UK Courts, including those in Scotland. The Procurator Fiscal was granted leave to appeal and has now done so. The Regulations thus remain in force and the controls on the sale, use and disposal of beef bones, including those in respect of bone-in beef, continue to be valid and will remain so unless the judgment is confirmed on appeal.

The requirements of these Regulations are essential for the protection of public health and the Government expect them to continue to be observed and enforced throughout the country. Advice has been issued to all food law enforcement authorities to make this clear—copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, the terms of the judgment should not affect the normal refrigeration of meat which should continue to be transported, stored and sold at the appropriate temperature.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he plans to take to compensate restaurateurs for loss of trade regarding sales of beef on the bone following the outcome of Procurator Fiscal v. Sutherland. [39662]

Dr. John Cunningham: None. There could be no justification for compensation, and we have in any case received no such claims.

Organophosphates

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those organophosphate-based treatments currently licensed by his Department, indicating in each case what they are licensed for and which licences have been revoked in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [39330]

Mr. Rooker: Organophosphorus-based sheep dips currently authorised are:

Diazinon-based:

Coopers All Seasons Fly and Scab Dip

Diazadip All Seasons Sheep Dip

Osmonds Gold Fleece Sheep Dip

Paracide Plus

Top Clip Fly and Scab Dip

Propetamphos-based

Flyte 1250/Seraphos Scab Approved

Ectomort Centenary

Some of these dips may be marketed under alternative names. Details are given in the list of all sheep ectoparasiticides, which is published every six months and a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

No marketing authorisations for OP-based veterinary medicines have been revoked during the past 5 years. Products may from time to time be withdrawn from the market but this is a matter for the authorisation holders.

A list of organophosphate-based pesticide products currently approved by MAFF for use in the UK has been placed in the Library.

Pesticide products may have their approvals revoked for a number of reasons. These include the commercial withdrawal of products from the market by the approval holder or approval holders not meeting data submission deadlines set by Ministers to support the continued approval of their products. A list of the MAFF-approved organophosphate-based pesticide products that have been revoked since 1 April 1993 has been placed in the Library.

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will implement the recommendations made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in 1992 for a legislative requirement for a twice-daily inspection of flocks of broiler chickens; and if he will make a statement. [37779]

Mr. Morley: We intend to implement the Farm Animal Welfare Council recommendation for twice daily inspection in the new welfare code for broiler chickens which is currently in preparation. Changes to the current legislative requirement for inspection at least once a day are, in our view, best pursued at EU level. The effectiveness of the new code will be kept under review.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will implement the recommendation made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in 1992 that stocking densities for broiler chickens should be controlled by regulations; and if he will make a statement. [37774]

Mr. Morley: The new welfare code for broiler chickens which is currently in preparation will repeat and reinforce the current recommendation for a maximum stocking density of 34 kg per sq metre. Implementation of a statutory limit is, in our view, best pursued at EU level. The effectiveness of the new welfare code will be kept under review.

SCOTLAND

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 292, and the subsequent letter from Highlands and Islands Enterprise, (1) if Highland and Islands Enterprise's appraisal of the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm assessed the likely increase in (a) the number of tourist days and (b) visitor expenditure; [38597]

(2) what was the projected impact on the winter and summer businesses of (a) Aonoch Mar, (b) the Lecht and (c) Glen Shee, identified in the economic appraisal of the proposed funicular railway in Cairn Gorm. [38595]

Mr. Wilson: These are operational matters for Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I will ask the Chairman of that organisation to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 292, and the subsequent letter from Highlands and Islands Enterprise, if he took into account the contents of HIE's economic appraisal in approving the expenditure by HIE on a funicular railway on Cairn Gorm; and what independent assessment of this appraisal his Department sought. [38596]

Mr. Wilson: The economic appraisal of the proposed funicular railway project was one of the factors which my right hon. Friend and I took into account in deciding to approve the financial contribution of Highlands and Islands Enterprise to the project.

My right hon. Friend and I do not usually seek an independent assessment of the economic appraisals carried out by or for Highlands and Islands Enterprise. Professional advice on the contents of such appraisals is available from Departmental officials.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has received from SEPA in respect of their recent assessment of the total radioactive inventory put into (a) the access shaft and (b) the storage silo at Dounreay. [38884]

Mr. Macdonald: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) has recently revised its assessment of the total inventory of radioactive material disposed of to the shaft. I understand that this report has not yet been issued to SEPA but it is expected in the near future. With regard to the silo, the regulatory responsibility rests with the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). An inventory of the contents of the silo does exist and is currently the subject of refinement by the UKAEA.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Saudi Arabia in connection with their detention of Sarah Jane Dematera. [39352]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Embassy in Riyadh has requested information about the case of Ms Dematera from the Saudi government. We await a response.

The Embassy is also in touch with the Philippines Embassy in order to monitor developments.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the arrangements made for the importation of radioactive nuclear material from Georgia; what plans have been made for reprocessing this material; what steps are being taken to safeguard the public during transportation and reprocessing; and if he will make a statement. [39586]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I would refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement I made on 22 April 1998, Official Report, columns 821–27.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Georgian highly-enriched uranium has arrived in the UK. [40073]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Georgian uranium arrived in the UK on US military aircraft in the early hours of this morning. It has now arrived safely at Dounreay where it is being handled by the UK Atomic Energy Authority.

In line with the oral statement I made on 22 April 1998, Official Report, columns 821–27, further information on the decision to take the Georgian uranium will be provided to the House within the next week.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 12 January, 13 February and 18 March from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Miss G. Shabeen, 26 Tagove Close. [39478]

Mr. Fatchett: Inquiries into the facts of this case have been completed and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will write to my right hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Human Rights

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement identifying which articles of which international human rights agreements to which the UK is a signatory are breached by countries where adults and children are used as bonded labour. [39356]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regard bonded labour as an intolerable form of labour akin to slavery, forced labour and compulsory labour. The international human rights instruments to which the United Kingdom is a party and which specifically prohibit or require the suppression of slavery, forced and compulsory labour are as follows:

(a) The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Article 8 of the Covenant states that no one shall be held in slavery; that slavery and the slave trade in all their forms shall be prohibited; that no one shall be held in servitude; and that no one shall be forced to perform forced or compulsory labour;

(b) The United Nations Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery. Article 1 of the Convention requires States parties to take all practicable and necessary legislative and other measures to bring about progressively and as soon as possible the complete abolition or abandonment of, among other institutions and practices, debt bondage, serfdom and any institution or practice whereby a child or young person under the age of 18 years is delivered by either or both of his natural parents or by his guardian to another person, whether for reward or not, with a view to the exploitation of the child or young person or of his labour.

(c) The International Labour Organisation Convention (No 29) Concerning Forced Labour. Article 1 of the Convention requires each State party to suppress the use of forced labour or compulsory labour in all its forms within the shortest possible period;

(d) The International Labour Organisation Convention (No 105) Concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour. Article 1 of the Convention requires each State party to suppress and not to make use of forced or compulsory labour.

Any State which ratified these human rights instruments would be in breach of its legally binding obligations if it did not fulfil its undertakings in respect of these Articles.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the proposed new international convention banning the worst abuses of child labour to be discussed at the International Labour Organisation meeting in June; and if he will make a statement. [39676]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We strongly support the development of a new International Labour Organisation Convention to eradicate the most intolerable forms of child labour. We will be participating very actively in the discussions to draw up the new instrument and we will seek to ensure that when adopted in 1999 it will be effective in terms of the progressive elimination of all extreme forms of child labour.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which aspects of the Government's human rights policy are his Department's responsibility. [39678]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department has overall responsibility for the Government's international human rights commitments. It works in partnership with other departments in Whitehall including the Department for International Development, which is responsible for the rights of poor and disadvantaged peoples in poorer countries; DfEE, which has lead responsibility within Whitehall for the UK's policy within the International Labour Organisation; DTI; the Home Office; and the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Hong Kong

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the legislation recently passed by the Provisional Legislature in Hong Kong exempting Chinese state organisations from the territories' laws with Article 22 of the Basic Law; and if he will make a statement. [39680]

Mr. Fatchett: It is reasonable that the Hong Kong SAR Government should adapt references to the British Crown in Hong Kong's laws. We share the concerns expressed in Hong Kong about the implications of the way in which this legislation has been drafted, including the extent to which Chinese state bodies will be bound by local laws.

The question of the Ordinance's compatibility with Article 22 of the Basic Law involves interpretation of Hong Kong law, and would therefore be a matter for the Hong Kong courts.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Examination Results

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list, for each education authority the number of (a) A to C and (b) A to E GSCE grades achieved per 1,000 (i) in total, (ii) normalised against an index of social deprivation across the authority catchment area and (iii) normalised against an index of achievement by pupils in the authority catchment area at the age of 11 years; [38296]

(2) if he will list for each education authority the number of A-level successes (a) in total, (b) normalised against an index of social deprivation for the education authority catchment area and (c) normalised against an index of achievement at age 11 years for each education authority catchment area. [38229]

Also shown are estimates of the attainments which LEAs would have achieved if their performance had been in line with the national pattern for authorities with a similar (a) proportion of maintained secondary school pupils in LEAs knows to be eligible for free school meals, and (b) LEA averaged achievements of maintained school pupils in the 1997 KS 2 English, Maths and Science Tests.

Progress measures between KS 3 and GCSE for schools will be published in this year's Secondary School Performance Tables.

Literacy Strategy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations his Department initiated prior to the development of the literacy strategy; and with which bodies. [39151]

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which Minister took the final decision to proceed with the advertising campaign for the winter fuel payments. [39716]

Mr. Denham: The advertising campaign for Winter Fuel Payments was approved by Ministers in the normal way. We were determined that pensioners should not be fearful of turning up their heating if a cold spell occurred. We also considered it important that pensioners knew as quickly as possible how much they would receive, as well as how and when it would be paid.

We explored the simplest and most cost-effective ways to let them know that a payment would be made. A publicity strategy was developed, which took account of views expressed by three of the pensioner welfare organisations, on the most effective ways to get the necessary information to as many of the eligible pensioners as possible. We found that a multi-media package, costing an estimated £1.7 million, was likely to reach and inform around 80 per cent. of the ten million eligible pensioners. In approving the package, I considered the cost reasonable, given that this was an unprecedented exercise providing help to over seven million pensioner households, at a total cost of £400 million over two years.

Following the announcement of the detail of the scheme in January, a campaign was swiftly launched in conjunction with Help the Aged, Age Concern and the National Association of Citizen's Advice Bureaux. It included advertisements in the press and on television, leaflets, posters and a dedicated telephone Helpline. The publicity ran for three months and enabled pensioners to turn up their heating, confident that a payment would be made. The Helpline is still available.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications were made for crisis loans in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; how many have been made to date in 1998 and what proportion of the applications have been successful in each year. [39715]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

As discretionary Social Fund annual allocations are made for the period 1 April to 31 March, the statistics on crisis loans are presented in the same way.

(2) how many incapacity benefit appeals are awaiting hearing. [39711]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In the quarter ending 30 September 1997, the average length of time taken to process an Incapacity Benefit appeal was 29 weeks. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the sums allocated to the Independent Tribunal Service from the Social Security Budget in each of the last three financial years. [39707]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Budget allocated to the Independent Tribunal Service for administration costs

£ million

Year	Allocation to the Independent Tribunal Service
1995–96	47.307
1996–97	55.107
1997–98	56.338

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines her Department follows in determining whether advertising campaigns are appropriate. [39708]

Mr. Field: The Department follows the guidelines laid down in the Mountfield Report which was published by the Cabinet Office on 27 November 1997. A copy of this report is in the Library. This draws on existing Cabinet Office guidelines on conventions on publicity and advertising "Guidance on Government Advertising and Publicity".

The main conventions are that "It is right and proper for governments to use public funds for publicity and advertising to explain their policies and to inform the public of the government services available to them and of their rights and liabilities . . . This basic rule covering all government publicity and advertising has been accepted under successive administrations."

Decisions are made in accordance with the above guidance taking into account such considerations as cost effectiveness and accountability.

Lone Parents

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the timescale for assessing the effectiveness of the New Deal for lone parents pilots; and what measurements will be used to assess the success or failure of the scheme. [39709]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A report comparing the short-term and longer-term outcomes for lone parents in the eight New Deal for Lone Parents lead areas with those in six control areas will be published around Autumn 1999.

The impact of the first phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents will be measured by comparing outcomes for lone parents in the lead areas with the outcomes for a similar, but geographically separate, group of lone parents in control areas. The control areas provide a benchmark or 'counterfactual' by which to assess the impact of the New Deal for Lone Parents.

Administrative data are being collected at the same time for both lead and control areas. For tracking purposes, these data will be collected for six months after the national rollout of the New Deal for Lone Parents to all lone parents in October 1998. Carefully selected samples of lone parents in the control areas will also be interviewed, as will lone parents in the lead areas.

Any additional movements into work in the New Deal for Lone Parents areas over and above that which occurs in the control areas can be attributed to the New Deal for Lone Parents itself, after allowing for changes in the local labour markets and other demographic factors. In addition, the comparison will show any additional movement into education and training as a step towards future labour market participation.

The Employment Service will be responsible for evaluating the national programme of the New Deal for Lone Parents from October 1998. The Employment Service is currently drafting a joint evaluation strategy in conjunction with the Department of Social Security and the Department for Education and Employment. This evaluation strategy will cover the period from national rollout to all lone parents in October 1998 through the lifetime of this Parliament.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information is being collected in the control areas in the New Deal for Lone Parents on the demography of those (a) participating and (b) refusing to participate. [39714]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Up to the beginning of April the New Deal for Lone Parents was available to lone parents in eight lead areas. In six other, control areas a variety of demographic information is being collected to help evaluate the effect of the New Deal for Lone Parents. However, since the New Deal for Lone Parents was not operational in these six areas, there are no participant or non-participant lone parents.

The information collected in the control areas is:

(i) Survey data on lone parents' patterns of employment and movements into work, their qualifications and training, partnership and family histories.

(ii) Income Support data for all lone parents which provide information on their full Income Support claim, date of birth, gender, number and age of children and number of non-dependants.

Pensions

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the publication date of the Initial Framework for Change relating to pensions will be. [39647]

Mr. Denham: The pensions review is looking at the central areas for elderly people, including all aspects of the basic pension and its value. A key objective of the review is to ensure that pensioners should have an adequate income in retirement; that they should share fairly in rising national prosperity; and that public finances should be both sustainable and affordable.

As set out in the Green Paper, "New Ambitions for our Country: A New Contract for Welfare" (Cm 3805), we will publish a Green Paper on pensions later this year. There will then be a period of further consultation before final detailed proposals are developed.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons under pensionable age were receiving incapacity benefit (a) at the latest date for which figures are available and (b) in April 1995. [39710]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Number of people under pension age in receipt of Incapacity Benefit on 12 April 1995	Number of people under pension age in receipt of Incapacity Benefit on 30 November 1997
1,594,800	1,561,580

Note:
The April 1995 figure is from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, the 1997 figure is taken from a 5 per cent. sample of the INCAP computer system and excludes a small number of cases held clerically.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to extend the Benefit Integrity Project to cover those claiming the lower rates of DLA. [39649]

Mr. Denham: The Government are responsible for ensuring that the right money goes to the right people. It is sensible to check from time that people are receiving their correct entitlement, but there are no plans at present to extend the Benefit Integrity Project to lower rates of Disability Living Allowance. Should any such plans arise, no action would be taken without full consultation with organisations of and for disabled people.

HEALTH

Contraceptive Pill

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect which charging for the contraceptive pill would have on the level of unwanted pregnancies in Britain. [37833]

Ms Jowell: No detailed assessment has been made as no such proposal is under consideration. Published studies suggest that any such charges would result in an increase in unwanted conceptions.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Sunderland)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists for patients in Sunderland; and if he will make a statement. [37863]

Mr. Milburn: In his Budget last month, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made an extra £417 million available to the National Health Service in England for 1998/99. £320 million of this will be used specifically to cut waiting lists. All health authorities and NHS trusts will be set waiting list targets to reduce the number of people awaiting hospital admission to less than 1.16 million by 31 March 1999, taking the total to below the record level inherited by the Government. Provisional management information indicates that on 31 March 1998 there were no English residents waiting more than 18 months for admission to hospital.

Prescription Charges

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the last full year for which figures are available (a) what was the total cost to the NHS of medicines and treatments issued by prescription, (b) how much of this cost was recouped by prescription charges, (c) how much would be recouped if the prescription charge was levied only once for all the items which comprise a specific course of treatment purchased on a single prescription, (d) how much would be recouped if the retail price was paid by the patient whenever it was less than the prescription charge and (e) how much would be recouped if the changes set out in (c) and (d) were both implemented. [38195]

Mr. Milburn: The information available in respect of 1996–97 for England is:

the total cost to the National Health Service of prescriptions dispensed £4,519 million amount collected[1] in prescription charges (including sales of pre-payment certificates): £296 million information on how much would be recouped if all the items for a single course of treatment was purchased on a single prescription is not available reduction in the amount that would have been collected[2] if the charge had been restricted to the cost to the NHS[3] when this was lower than the prescription charge: £50 million

Information on how much would be recouped if both of these changes were implemented is not available.

Notes:

[1] by pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors

[2] by pharmacists and appliance contractors only for items charged at the point of dispensing. There would also be an unquantifiable effect in the amount collected by dispensing doctors and from the sale of pre-payment certificates

[3] information about retail prices is not available in this context

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccine

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce single vaccine components of MMR. [38141]

Ms Jowell: No. Following the scientific seminar organised by the Medical Research Council, the Chief Medical Officer wrote to all health professionals on 27 March concluding:

"I therefore recommend that children should receive measles, mumps and rubella vaccine at the appropriate times, and should not be given the separate component vaccines, since there is no evidence that doing this has any benefit and it may even be harmful."

Copies of the full letter are in the Library.

The World Health Organisation has written to the Department advising:

"We believe none of these data in the Lancet of 28 February 1998 provide a basis for providing the different components of this vaccine in separate schedules. We wished to inform you of this as a means of offering you and your colleagues support in remaining firm in supporting the continued use of this highly effective vaccine which has such an outstanding safety record."

The option of separate vaccine immunisation is not supported by an studies into its safety or efficacy.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccination

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instigate an independent inquiry into the effects of the MMR vaccination. [39650]

Ms Jowell: The effects of measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) immunisation have been carefully examined by two groups of independent experts: the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation and the Committee on Safety of Medicines. In addition, following the recent publicity about possible adverse reactions to MMR, a group of 37 independent experts was convened by the Medical Research Council (MRC) on 23 March under the chairmanship of Professor Sir John Pattison. The group examined published and unpublished research into a suggested association between MMR vaccine and Crohn's disease and autism. The independent experts concluded:

The available virological and epidemiological evidence does not support a causal role for persistent measles virus infection in Crohn's disease.

There is no evidence to indicate any link between MMR vaccination and bowel disease or autism.

There is therefore no reason for a change in the current MMR vaccination policy.

As a result, the Chief Medical Officer has advised that:

"Based on the previous material that I have seen, and on the opinions of experts present at the MRC meeting, I have concluded that there is no link between measles, measles vaccine or MMR immunisation, Crohn's disease and autistic spectrum disorders. Together with others at the meeting, I was not convinced that any of the studies support suggestions that measles or MMR vaccines are implicated in Crohn's disease or in autism. I therefore recommend that children should receive MMR vaccine at the appropriate times, and should not be given the separate component vaccines, since there is no evidence that doing this has any benefit and it may even be harmful."

Pathogens (Sales)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria applied to the export of pathogens from the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research at Porton Down between 1 January 1985 and 31 December 1989; and what criteria are applied now. [38834]

Mr. Milburn: Since the formation of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research in 1979, any request relating to the export of pathogens has been carefully considered on a case by case basis, taking due cognisance of the relevant export control legislation and guidance issued by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records were kept of the sale of pathogens from his Department's installations between 1 January 1985 and 31 December 1989; and what records are kept now. [38832]

Mr. Milburn: Records are kept of all customers who purchase material from the European Collection of Cell Cultures, Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research (CAMR); the National Collection of Type Cultures, Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS); and the National Collection of Pathogenic Fungi, PHLS.

The databases maintained at each of the culture collections include the name and address of the customer, the date, details of the material supplied and the price charged. This arrangement has been in place at CAMR since 1979. The records at the PHLS National Collection of Type Cultures date from October 1985 and there is an additional record of computer generated sales invoices, stored in date sequence, dating from mid-1988. The records held at the PHLS National Collection of Pathogenic Fungi date from the 1970s.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what pathogens were sold and at what price to the American Type Culture Collection in Rockville, Maryland, by the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research at Porton Down between 1 January 1985 and 31 December 1989. [38833]

Mr. Milburn: The centre for applied microbiology and research has not sold or supplied any pathogens to the American type culture collection between 1 January 1985 and 31 December 1989.

Consultant Contracts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will undertake an inquiry to establish the extent to which NHS consultants are not fulfilling their NHS contracts. [39333]

Mr. Milburn: We do not believe that an inquiry would serve a useful purpose. The evidence is that the vast majority of National Health Service consultants make a full and welcome contribution to patient care. NHS managers should take action locally where they believe that an individual consultant is not meeting NHS commitments under the terms of his or her contract.

Aricept

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Standing Medical Advisory Committee will publish its report on the drug Aricept. [39646]

Mr. Boateng: The Standing Medical Advisory Committee's guidance to clinicians on the use of donepezil (Aricept) for Alzheimer's disease will be distributed to health authorities shortly.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

SIXTH SERIES OFFICIAL REPORT VOLUME 310

SESSION 1997–98

6th April—24th April 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
